VACCARIA (Lat. vacca, a cow). A dairy-house. Co. Litt. 5 b.

VACCINATION. The Vaccination Act of 1898 requires that every child born in England shall be vaccinated within six months of its birth. But if a parent within four months from the birth of the child satisfies two justices that he conscientiously believes that vaccination would be prejudicial to the health of the child, and delivers within seven days thereafter a certificate from such justices to the vaccination officer, he is exempted from the penalties provided in the act for non-compliance therewith. 42 Sol. Jour. 814.

It is within the police power of the state to compel the vaccination of children attending the public schools; 167 Ill. 67; and an act requiring compulsory vaccination is not in conflict with the provisions of the federal constitution; 23 Atl. Rep. 848. Pupils may be excluded for refusing to be vaccinated during a smallpox scare; 163 Pa. 476; they may be denied admission to the schools; 23 N. Y. Suppl. 523; but it has been held that a rule of the board of health excluding a pupil who is not vaccinated is void in the absence of a statute authorizing it; 87 L. R. A. (Wia.) 157; 167 Ill. 67. See 25 L. R. A. 152; 28 id. 820; 47 Am. St. Rep. 546; POLICE POWER.

VADIMONIUM. In the Roman Law. Bail or security; the giving of bail for appearance in court; a recognizance. Burrill; Calv. Lex.

VADIUM MORTUUM (Lat.). A mortgage or dead pledge; it is a security given by the borrower of a sum of money, by which he grants to the lender an estate in fee, on condition that if the money be not repaid at the time appointed, the estate so put in pledge shall continue to the lender as dead or gone from the mortgage. 2 Bla. Com. 257.

VADIUM PONERE. To take bail for the appearance of a person in a court of justice. Toml.

VADIUM VIVUM (Lat.). A species of security by which the borrower of a sum of money made over his estate to the lender until he had received that sum out of the issues and profits of the land; it was so called because neither the money nor the lands were lost, and were not left in dead pledge, but this was a living pledge, for the profits of the land were constantly paying off the debt. Littleton § 206; 1 Powell, Mortg. 3.

VAGABOND. One who wanders about idly, who has no certain dwelling. It is not synonymous with vagrant. 28 Tex. App. 562.

VAGRANCY. When not defined by a statute, it must be considered such a vagabondage as fairly comes within the common-law meaning of the word. 41 Mich. 299; 90 id. 8.

VAGRANT. A person who lives idly, without any settled home. A person who refuses to work, or goes about begging. This latter meaning is the common one in statutes punishing vagrancy. See 1 Wils. 331; 8 Term 26; 90 Mich. 8. See TRAMP.

VAGRANT ACT. In English Law. The statute 5 Geo. IV. c. 83, which is an act for the punishment of idle and disorderly persons. 2 Chit. Stat. 145.

VAGUENESS. Uncertainty. Certainty is required in contracts, wills, pleadings, judgments, and, indeed, in all the acts on which courts have to give a judgment, and if they be vague so as not to be understood, they are, in general, invalid; 5 B. & C. 588. A charge of frequent intemperance and habitual indolence is vague and too general; 2 Mart. La. N. S. 580. See 36 Ch. Div. 848; CERTAINTY; NONSENSE; UNCERTAINTY.

VALESHERIA. See ENGLESHIRE.

VALID. Having force, of binding force; legally sufficient or efficacious; authorized by law. Anderson, L. Dict.

VALIDITY. Legal sufficiency in contradistinction to mere regularity. An official sale, an order, judgment, or decree may be regular; the whole practice in reference to its entry may be correct, but still invalid for reasons going behind the regularity of its forms. 1 Elipp. 487.

VALIDITY OF AUTHORITY. In 130 U. S. 210, Mr. Chief Justice Fuller said: "Whenever the power to enact a statute as it is by its terms, or made to read by construction, is fairly open to denial and denied the validity of such statute is drawn in question, but not otherwise. "And the Chief Justice added upon the authority of 6 Wall. 258, 261, 262, that the word "authority" stands upon the same footing. 252 U. S. 6.

VALLEY. The common understanding of the word "valley" as applied to a mountainous country is as meaning lowlands in contradistinction to mountain slopes and ridges. 167 Fed. 609.

VALOR BENEFICIORUM (Lat.). The value of every ecclesiastical benefice and preferment, according to which the first-fruits and tenths are collected and paid. The valuation by which the clergy are at present rated was made 26 Hen. VIII., and is commonly called The King's Books. 1 Sharsw. Bla. Com. *284.

VALOR MARIAGII (Lat.). The amount forfeited under the ancient tenures by a ward to a guardian who had offered her a marriage without disparagement, which she refused. It was so much as a jury would assess, or as any one would give bona fide, for the value of the marriage. Littleton 110. A writ which lay against the ward, on coming of full age, for that he was not married by his guardian, for the value of the marriage, and this though no convenient marriage had been offered. Termes de la Ley.

VALUABLE CONSIDERATION. See CONSIDERATION.

VALUABLE PAPERS. Papers of some value; worthy of preservation. Anderson; 5 Coldw. 135.

VALUABLE SECURITY. Every valuable security is a valuable thing, but many valuable things are not valuable securities. The words "other valuable things" include everything of value; 85 N. J. L. 452; as a promissory note; 29 id. 18. Joe has been held a valuable article; 83 Ind. 402. Valuable papers are not papers having a money value, but only such as are kept and considered worthy of being taken care of by the particular person; 2 Head (Tenn.) 306. They have been defined to be such as are regarded by a testator as worthy of preservation: in his estimation, of some value. The term is not confined to deeds for lands or slaves, obligations for money or certificates of stock; 5 Coldw. 129. See VALUABLE THING.

VALUABLE THING. As distinguished from 'valuable security': 'Valuable thing' is more comprehensive than 'valuable security'. Every valuable security is a valuable thing, but many valuable things are not valuable securities. 29 Am. & Eng. Encyc. 2nd ed., 575; 35 N. J. L. 452.

VALUATION. The act of ascertaining the worth of a thing. The estimated worth of a thing. 7 Nev. 99. See VALUE.

VALUATION LIST. In English Law. A list of all the ratable hereditaments in a parish.

VALUE. The utility of an object. The worth of an object in purchasing other goods. The first may be called value in use; the latter, value in exchange.

When assessed without qualification to property of any description, necessarily means the price which it will command in the market; 17 Wend. 899. See 30 W. Va. 103. In an indictment, it has been held to be a synonym of "effect" or "import." 25 Ohio St. 488.

Value differs from price, q. v. The latter is applied to live cattle and animals; in a declaration, therefore, for taking cattle, they ought to be said to be of such a price, and in a declaration for taking dead chattels, or those which never had life, it ought to lay them to be of such a value; 2 Lilly, Abr. 629. See 119 Mass. 126.

It is also distinguished from income when applied to property; 45 Barb. 247. As used in reference to lands taken under eminent domain, it is a relative term, depending on the circumstances. Salable value, actual value, and cash value all mean the same thing and are designed to effect the same purpose; Burr. Tax. 227. See 101 U. S. 162. See INTRINSIC VALUE. Upon the question of the value of an article evidence of its original cost is relevant; 83 Fed. Rep. 95. See FAIR VALUE; INTRINSIC VALUE. NET VALUE.

VALUE RECEIVED. A phrase usually employed in a bill of exchange or promissory note, to denote that a consideration has been given for it. These words are not necessary; 11 A. & E. 702; 21 Wisc. 607; though it is otherwise in some states if the bill or note be not negotiable; 19 Conn. 7; 29 Ill. 104; extrinsic evidence is admissible between immediate parties to prove absence, failure, or illegality of consideration; 5 Allen 589; 9 id. 45, 253.

The expression value received, when put in a bill of exchange, will bear two interpretations; the drawer of the bill may be presumed to acknowledge the fact that he has received value of the payee; 3 Maule & S. 351; 2 McLean 213; or when the bill has been made payable to the order of the drawer and accepted, it implies that value has been received by the acceptor; 5 Maule & S. 65; 19 Barb. 409. In a promissory note, the expression imports value received from the payee; 5 B. & C. 380; and sufficiently expresses a consideration; 149 U. S. 298; although not necessarily in money; 32 Ia. 265.

VALUED POLICY. See POLICY. IN SURANCE, Rental Insurance.

VARA. A measure used in Mexican land grants equal to 32.9027 inches. 161 U. S. 219.

VARIANCE. A disagreement or difference between two parts of the same legal proceeding which ought to agree together. Variances are between the writ and the declaration, and between the declaration, or bill in equity, and the evidence.

Variance in matter of substance is fatal to the action; 4 Ala. 319; 10 Johns. 141; and is ground for demurrer or arrest of judgment; 3 Den. 356; 7 T. B. Monr. 290; but if in matter of form merely, must be pleaded in abatement; 1 Ill. 298; 1 McLean 319; or special demurrer; 2 Hill S. C. 535; and a variance between the allegations and evidence upon some material points only is as fatal as if upon all; 7 Taunt. 385; but, if it be merely formal or immaterial matter, will be disregarded; 7 Cra. 408; 11 Ala. 542. The court may allow a technical variance between the pleadings and proofs to be cured by an amendment not introducing any other cause of action or affecting the merits of the case between the parties; 138 U. S. 623. Slight variance from the terms of a written instrument which is professedly set out in the words themselves is fatal; Hampst. 294.

It is too late after plea to take advantage of a variance between the description in the writ and the declaration of property replied; 95 Mich. 594.

Where, in an action on contracts, the pleader did not set out the exact words of the contract, and a different contract expressed in different words was proved, there is no real variance, as the difference between the declaration and the proofs must be real and tangible to constitute a variance; 25 U. S. App. 58. Where the plaintiff declared that his cattle died of "Texas cattle fever," and that it was contagious, and the court found that the cattle died of "Texas fever," and it was infectious, held that the variance was immaterial; 183 U. S. 468. So where in an indictment the name of the "National State Bank," "carrying on a national banking business at the City of Exeter," was used instead of "The National Granite State Bank of Exeter;" 163 U. S. 87.

VASSAL. In Feudal Law. The name given to the holder of a fief bound to perform feudal service: this word was then always correlative to that of lord, entitled to such service.

The vassal himself might be lord of some other vassal.

In after-times, this word was used to signify a species of slave who owed servitude and was in a state of dependency on a superior lord. 2 Bla. Com. 53.

VAVASOUR (diminutive from vasallus, or, according to Bracton, from vas sortitus ad valitudinem). One who was in dignity next to a baron. Britton 109; Bracton, lib. 1, c. 8. One who held of a baron. Encyc. Brit.

VECTIGALIA. In Roman Law. Duties which were paid to the prince for the importation and exportation of certain merchandise. They differed from tribute, which was a tax paid by each individual. Code 4. 61. 5. 13.

VEHICLE. The word includes every description of carriage or other artificial contrivance used or capable of being used as a means of transportation on land; U. S. Rev. Stat. § 4; a street sprinkler is a vehicle; 71 Mo. 92; but not a street car; 14 Pa. 484; or a ferry boat; 25 Ind. 286. See BICYCLE; TEAM.

VEIN. See LODGE.

VEJOURS. An obsolete word, which signified viewers or experts.

VENAL. Something that is bought. The term is generally applied in a bad sense; as, a venal office is an office which has been purchased.

VEND AND VENDING. The words "vend" and "vending," as used in § 4952, Rev. Stat., in regard to the copyright protection afforded authors and as used in § 4884 Rev. Stat., in regard to the protection accorded inventors for their patented articles, are substantially the same, and the protection intended to be secured to authors and inventors is substantially identical. 229 U. S. 2.

VENDEE. A purchaser; a buyer.

VENDITION. A sale; the act of selling.

VENDITIONI EXPONAS (Lat.). That you expose to sale.

In Practice. The name of a writ of execution, directed to the sheriff, commanding him to sell goods or chattels, and in some states, lands, which he has taken in execution by virtue of a feri facias, and which remain unsold.

Under this writ the sheriff is bound to sell the property in his hands, and he cannot return a second time that he can get no buyers; Cowp. 406.

VENDITOR REGIS (Lat.). The king's salesman, or person who exposes to sale goods or chattels seized or distrained to answer any debt due to the king. Cowel. This office was granted by Edw. I. to Philip de Lordiner, but was seized into the king's hands for abuse thereof. 2 Edw. II.

VENDOR. The seller; one who disposes of a thing in consideration of money.

VENDOR'S LIEN. An equitable lien allowed the vendor of land sold for the unpaid purchase-money. 3 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 1260. See LIEN.

VENIA AETATIS (Lat.). A privilege granted to a person not of age, by the sovereign, whereby the party is entitled to act, and to have all the powers to act, as if he were of full age.

VENIRE (Lat.). (To come.) The name of a writ by which a jury is summoned. Otherwise termed a venire facias.

VENIRE FACIAS (Lat.). That you cause to come. According to the English law, the proper process to be issued on an indictment for any petit misdemeanor, or a penal statute, is a writ called venire facias.

It is in the nature of a summons to cause the party to appear; 4 Bla. Com. 18, 351. See Thomp. & M. Juries 62.

VENIRE FACIAS JURATORES (Lat.). (Frequently called venire simply.)

The name of a writ directed to the sheriff, commanding him to cause to come from the body of the county, before the court from which it issued, on some day certain and therein specified, a certain number of qualified citizens who are to act as jurors in the said court. Steph. Pl. 104. See 6 S. & R. 414; 3 Chitty, Pr. 797; JURY.

VENIRE FACIAS DE NOVO (Lat.).

The name of a new writ of venire facias; this is awarded when, by reason of some irregularity or defect in the proceeding on the first venire, or the trial, the proper effect of the venire has been frustrated, or the verdict become void in law; as, for example, when the jury has been improperly chosen, or an uncertain, ambiguous, or defective verdict has been rendered. Steph. Pl. 120; or when a judgment is reversed on a writ of error.

A motion for a venire de novo is properly denied, where there is no defect, ambiguity, or uncertainty in the verdict; 6 Ind. App. 268; 8 id. 500; and upon reversal of a judgment, the awarding the writ is controlled by the character of the case and the sound discretion of the appellate court; 96 Pa. 142. See RES JUDICATA.

VENIT ET DICIT (L. Lat.). Comes and says.

VENIT ET DEFENDIT (L. Lat.). Comes and defends.

VENTE. (Fr. from vendre, to sell.) Sale. Burrill; Britt. c. 26.

VENTE A REMERE. In French Law. A sale made, reserving a right to the seller to repurchase the property sold by returning the price paid for it.

The term is used in Canada and Louisiana. The time during which a repurchase may be made cannot exceed ten years, and, if by the agreement it so exceed, it shall be reduced to ten years.

VENTER, VENTRE (Lat. the belly). The wife; for example, a man has three children by the first and one by the second venter. A child is said to be en ventre sa mere before it is born; while it is a fetus. See UNBORN CHILD.

VENTRE INSPICIENDO. See DE VENTRE INSPICIENDO; JURY OF WOMEN; PHYSICAL EXAMINATION.

VENUE (L. Lat. visnetum, neighborhood. The word was formerly spelled visne. Co. Litt. 125 a).

The county in which the facts are alleged to have occurred, and from which the jury are to come to try the issue. Gould, Pl. c. 3, § 102; 1 How. 241. Some certain place must be alleged as the place of occurrence for each traversable fact; Com. Dig. Pleader (C. 20). Generally, in modern pleading, in civil practice, no special allegation is needed in the body of the declaration, the venue in the margin being understood to be the place of occurrence till the contrary is shown; Hempst. 386.

In local actions the true venue must be laid; that is, the action must be brought in the county where the cause of action arose, where the property is situated, in actions affecting real property; 2 Zab. 204; and there can be no change of venue in such cases; 3 N. Y. 204. Thus, in actions on a lease at common law, founded on privity of contract, as debt or covenant by lessor or lessee; 1 Saund. 241 b; 3 S. & R. 500; venue is transitory, but when founded in privity of estate, as in case of assignment, the venue is local; 1 Saund. 257. By various early statutes, however, actions on leases have become generally transitory. In such action, some particular place, as, a town, village, or parish, must formerly have been designated; Co. Litt. 135. But it is said to be no longer necessary except in replevin; 3 East 503; 1 Chitty, Pl. 251. As to where the venue is to be laid in case of a change of county lines, see 18 Ga. 690; 16 Pa. 3; 103 Cal. 501.

In transitory actions the venue may be laid in any county the plaintiff chooses; that is, he may bring suit wherever he may find the defendant, and lay his cause of action to have arisen there, even though the cause of action arose in a foreign jurisdiction; Steph. Pl. 306; 18 Ga. 690; 1 How. 241. In case the cause was to be tried in a different county from that in which the matter actually arose, the venue was anciently laid by giving the place of occurrence, with a scilicet giving the place of trial; 1 How. 241; 3 Zab. 279. In some cases, however, by statutes, the venue in transitory actions must be laid in the county where the matter occurred or where certain parties reside; 3 Bla. Com. 294. And generally, by statute, it must be in the county where one of the parties resides, when between citizens of the same state.

In criminal proceedings the venue must be laid in the county where the occurrence actually took place; 4 C. & P. 368; and the act must be proved to have occurred in that jurisdiction; 26 Pa. 513; 4 Tex. 450; 6 Cal. 202. Where the offence is committed by letter, the sender may be tried at the place where the letter is received by the person to whom it is addressed; 138 U. S. 356. See 49 Fed. Rep. 843. An indictment for murder charging that an offence was committed on board of an American vessel on the high seas within the jurisdiction of the court and within the admiralty jurisdiction of the United States, sufficiently avers the locality of the offence; 154 U. S. 134. One who obtains goods from a salesman under false pretences may be tried in the county from which the goods were shipped; 187 Pa. 225.

Statement of venue in the margin and reference thereto in the body of an indictment is a sufficient statement of venue; 89 Me. 78; 8 Mo. 283; and the venue need not be stated in the margin if it appears from the indictment; 5 Gray 478; 25 Conn. 48; 2 McLean 580.

Want of any venue is a cause for demurrer; 5 Mass. 94; or abatement; Archb. Civ. Pl. 78; or arrest of judgment; 4 Tex. 450. So defendant may plead or demur to a wrong venue; 13 Me. 130. Change of venue may be made by the court to prevent, and not to cause a defeat of justice; 3 Bla. Com. 294; 2 Wisc. 397; 20 Ill. 259; both in civil; 7 Ind. 110; 31 Miss. 490; and criminal cases; 7 Ind. 160; 28 Ala. n. s. 28; 5 Harring. 513; and such change is a matter of right on compliance with the requirements of the law; 9 Tex. 358; 2 Wisc. 419; 15 Ill. 511; 8 Mo. 606. That such change is a matter of discretion with the court below, see 28 Ala. n. s. 28; 31 Miss. 490; 8 Cal. 410; 8 Ind. 489; 50 Kan. 773; 75 Ia. 80; 91 Tenn. 617; 181 U. S. 22.

See JURISDICTION.

VERAY. An ancient manner of spelling verai, true. In the English law there are three kinds of tenants: veray, or true tenant, who is one who holds in fee-simple; tenant by the manner (see TENANT); and veray tenant by the manner, who is the same as tenant by the manner, with this difference only, that the fee-simple, instead of remaining in the lord, is given by him or by the law to another. Hamm. N. P. 394.

VERBAL. Parol; by word of mouth; as verbal agreement; verbal evidence. Sometimes incorrectly used for oral.

VERBAL ACTS. The res gestae included statements made by a car inspector to appellant who was injured and together with the inspection itself, constituted what are known in law as "verbal acts." 152 Ky. 183, 153 S. W. 206.

VERBAL ADMONITIONS. "Verbal admonitions" of the court made during the progress of the trial in reference to questions of evidence are not instructions within the meaning of Code provisions, requiring all instructions to be in writing. 143 Ky. 587, 137 S. W. 205.

VERBAL NOTE. In diplomatic language, a memorandum or note, not signed, sent when an affair has continued a long time, without any reply, in order to avoid the appearance of an urgency which perhaps the affair does not require, and, on the other hand, not to afford any ground for supposing that it is forgotten, or that there is no intention of prosecuting it any further, is called a verbal note.

VERBAL PROCESS. In Louisiana. A written account of any proceeding or operation required by law, signed by the person commissioned to perform the duty, and attested by the signature of witnesses. See PROCESS VERBAL.

VERDEROR (fr. French verdeur, fr. vert or verd, green; Law L. viridarius). An officer in king's forest, whose office is properly to look after the vert, for food and shelter for the deer. He is also sworn to keep the assizes of the forest, and receive and enrol the attachments and presentments of trespasses within the forest, and certify them to the swanimator or justice-seat; Cowel; Manwood, For. Law 332.

VERDICT. The unanimous decision made by a jury and reported to the court on the matters lawfully submitted to them in the course of a trial of a cause.

A general verdict is one by which the jury pronounce at the same time on the fact and the law, either in favor of the plaintiff or defendant. Co. Litt. 228; 4 Bla. Com. 461. See DECISION.

A general verdict is a finding by the jury in the terms of the issue referred to them. 8 Ga. 208; Tidd, Pr. 798.

A general verdict must be regarded as affirming the truth of every fact necessary to support the general conclusion arrived at, and every reasonable presumption arises in its favor, while nothing will be presumed in aid of the special findings as against the general verdict; 118 Ind. 5. If there is any reasonable hypothesis whereby a general verdict and the special finding can be reconciled, judgment must follow the general verdict; 117 Ind. 234; 119 Id. 218; and a general verdict on an indictment is sufficient if supported by any one of the counts; 101 N. C. 680; 85 Ala. 14; 34 Fed. Rep. 878.

The jury may find such a verdict whenever they think fit to do so.

A partial verdict in a criminal case is one by which the jury acquit the defendant of a part of the accusation against him, and find him guilty of the residue.

A privy verdict is one delivered privily to a judge out of court. A verdict of this kind is delivered to the judge after the jury have agreed, for the convenience of the jury, who, after having given it, separate. This verdict is of no force whatever; and this practice, being exceedingly liable to abuse, is seldom, if ever, allowed in the United States. The jury, however, are allowed in some states, in certain cases, to seal their verdict and return it into court, as, for example, where a verdict is agreed upon during the adjournment of the court for the day. When this is done in criminal cases it is usually the right of the defendant to have the jury present in court when the verdict is opened; 10 Fed. Rep. 269. See PRESENCE; SEALING A VERDICT.

A private verdict must afterwards be given publicly in order to give it any effect. A public verdict is one delivered in open court.

A special verdict is one by which the facts are found, and the law is submitted to the judges. 4 Rand. 504; 1 Wash. C. C. 499; 2 Mass. 81. The jury may find a special verdict in criminal cases, but they are not obliged in any case to do so; Cooley, Const. Lim. 898. The special verdict or findings of a jury in order to sustain a judgment, must pass upon all the material issues made in the pleadings so as to enable the court to say upon the pleadings and verdict, without looking at the evidence, which party is entitled to judgment; 40 Minn. 375; 48 Id. 897; 88 Id. 260; 150 U. S. 597. A special verdict need only find such facts as are alleged in the pleadings upon one side and denied upon the other; 69 Tex. 124.

The jury have an option, instead of finding the negative or affirmative of the issue, as in a general verdict, to find all the facts of the case as disclosed by the evidence before them, and, after so setting them forth, to conclude to the following effect: That they are ignorant, in point of law, on which side they ought upon those facts to find the issue. This form of finding is called a special verdict. In practice they have nothing to do with the formal preparation of the special verdict. When it is agreed that a verdict of that kind is to be given, the jury merely declare their opinion as to any fact remaining in doubt, and then the verdict is adjourned without their further interference. It is settled upon either side, according to the state of the facts as found by the jury, with respect to all particulars on which they have delivered an opinion, and, with respect to other particulars, according to the state of facts which it is agreed that they ought to find upon the evidence before them. The special verdict, when its form is thus settled, is, together with the whole proceedings on the trial, then entered on record; and the question of law, arising on the facts found, is argued before the court in banc; 8 Bla. Com. 377.

There is another method of finding a special verdict: this is when the jury find a verdict generally for the plaintiff, but subject nevertheless to the opinion of the judges or the court above on a special case, stated by the counsel on both sides, with regard to a matter of law; 8 Bla. Com. 378. See 10 Mass. 64; 11 Id. 858.

A jury may dissent at any time from a verdict to which he had before agreed until the same is recorded; 15 Am. L. Rev. 484. A mistake in the verdict may be corrected before it is recorded and the jury discharged; 98 N. C. 678.

Where a jury being equally divided in opinion come to an agreement by lot, it was formerly held that its verdict was legitimate; 1 Kibble 811; but such verdicts are now held to be illegal, and will be set aside. The "quotient" verdict is so called from the fact that the jurors, having agreed to find for the plaintiff, further agree that their verdict shall be in such sum as is ascertained by each juror privately dividing the sum of money in dispute by the number of the plaintiff entitled, the total of these sums being divided by twelve. This method is almost universally condemned, the ground of the objection being that such an agreement cuts off all deliberation on the part of the jurors, and places it in the power of one of their number by making a sum extraordinarily high or ridiculously low to make the quotient unreasonably large or small; 8 Sm. & M. 55; 1 Wash. T. 329; 184 Ind. 108; so of a verdict in a criminal case fixing the term of imprisonment; 80 Tex. Cr. Rep. 126. In contrast, in the case of a fine in a criminal case for libel; 95 Ky. 322. But where the calculation is purely informal, for the purpose of ascertaining the sense of the jury, the objection is obviated, and the verdict will stand; 1 Humph. 399; 33 Ill. 410; 74 Ia. 359; 23 Neb. 629; 77 Cal. 528; 40 Kan. 528; 3 Miss. Rep. 322. A verdict obtained by taking one-twelfth of the aggregate amount of the several estimates of the jurors is not objectionable when there was no antecedent agreement to be bound by the result, and when each juror deliberately accepted the amount thus ascertained; 87 Fed. Rep. 895; 37 Neb. 742; but if in pursuance of an agreement to be bound by the result, the verdict must be set aside; 1 Col. App. 350; 85 Tenn. 246; 23 Cal. 259; 112 Ill. 525; 17 R. I. 240. So where two of the jurors agree that if one place a coin and the other guesses heads or tails, and the guess is right, they will agree with the majority; 23 Cal. 47; or where a verdict is reached by drawing lots it will be set aside; 39 Cal. 169; 66 Ga. 129; 20 Ia. 105; 100 Mass. 325. See JURY.

A verdict allowing a larger sum than is claimed in the petition must be set aside; 78 Ia. 300. Where a verdict in an action for breach of covenant is larger than the plaintiff's claim a remittitur is properly allowed; 80 Vt. 69; and a remission of part of the verdict, followed by a judgment for the remaining sum, as a condition of the denial of a new trial, does not deprive the defendant of his constitutional right to have the question of damages tried by a jury, or to exclude a remission of the facts tried by the jury in violation of the 7th amendment of the U. S. constitution; 190 U. S. 62.

A verdict received on Sunday is valid; 89 U. S. App. 32; a third successive verdict was set aside in 164 U. S. 522.

See NEW TRIAL; TRIAL; AFFIRMER THE ANSWER.

VERDICT CONTRARY TO LAW. A "verdict" is "contrary to law" when it is contrary to the instructions whether they are right or wrong. 132 Ky. 241, 116 S. W. 693.

VERDICT, SPECIAL. See AGREED CASE; CASE STATED.

VERGE. An uncertain quantity of land, from fifteen to thirty acres. Toml. See COURT OF THE MARSHALLS; VIRGA.

VERIFICATION (Lat. verum, true, facio, to make). An averment by the party making a pleading that he is prepared to establish the truth of the facts which he has pleaded.

Whenever new matter is introduced on either side, the plea must conclude with the verification or averment, in order that the other party may have an opportunity of answering it; 1 Sand. 103, n. 1. This applies only to pleas.

In one instance, however, new matter need not conclude with a verification, and then the pleader may pray judgment without it: for example, when the matter pleaded is merely negative; Lawes, Pl. 145. The reason of it is evident: a negative requires no proof; and it would, therefore, be impertinent or nugatory for the pleader, who pleads a negative matter, to declare his readiness to prove it.

The usual form of verification of a plea containing matter of fact is, "And thus he is ready to verify," etc. See 3 Bla. Com. 309.

See BILL; INJUNCTION.

In Practice. The examination of the truth of a writing: the certificate that the writing is true. See AUTHENTICATION.

VERIFY. Sometimes to confirm and substantiate by oath; and sometimes by argument. 3 How. Pr. 234.

VERMONT. One of the United States.

At the outbreak of the Revolution the people of Vermont joined their brethren in the contest, though independent of the federal government. In 1777 they declared their territory to be "a free independent jurisdiction," and adopted a constitution which with subsequent amendments is still the constitution of the state. Under this constitution the state maintained its government and its independence for fourteen years, until its admission to the Union in 1791. The institutions of Vermont were modelled in large part from those of Connecticut (Art. 35).

VERSIO VULGATA. See LIBER AUTHENTICARUM.

VERSUS. Against; as, A B versus C D. This is usually abbreviated v. or vs. Vs. and versus have become ingrafted upon the English language; their meaning is as well understood and their use quite as appropriate as the word against could be; 23 N. H. 533. See TITLE.

VERT. Everything bearing green leaves in a forest. Manwood, For. Law 146.

VERTIGO. "Vertigo" is "swimming in the head." 87 Ky. 541, 9 S. W. 812.

VERY LORD AND VERY TENANT. They that are immediate lord and tenant one to another. Cowel.

VESSEL. In Maritime Law. A ship, brig, sloop, or other craft used in navigation. 1 Boulay-Paty, tit. 1, p. 100. The term is rarely applied to any water craft without a deck; 3 Mas. 137; but has been used to include everything capable of being used as a means of transportation by water; 27 La. Ann. 607.

By R. S. § 3, "the word 'vessel' includes every description of water craft or other artificial contrivance used, or capable of being used, as a means of transportation on water. See 48 Fed. Rep. 703.

A floating elevator towed from place to place, and used to transfer grain, has the characteristics of a vessel; 8 Bened. 506. So of a scow adapted only for use in port in carrying ballast to and from vessels, having neither steam power nor sails nor rudder, and moving by steam tugs; 3 Fed. Rep. 411; so of canal boats; id.; so of a scow built for carrying a steam shovel worked by the steam engine of the scow; 30 Fed. Rep. 206; and a barge having no sails, masts, or rudders and used only for the transportation of bricks, suitable only to be towed by a tug; 86 id. 607; so of a floating scow fitted with steam appliances for deepening channels; 40 id. 858; a steam dredge; 53 id. 607; 30 id. 206; 83 id. 840; a barge and scow; 61 id. 502; 77 id. 478. The means of propulsion makes no difference; 8 Sawy. 211. An open boat is not a vessel; 5 Mas. 120; nor a raft; 14 Fed. Rep. 236; nor a canal boat; 5 Wend. 564.

Vessels navigated to a port are subject to distinct duties and obligations, and are not dutiable as imported merchandise; 166 U. S. 110.

Vessels must have their names marked on them; 2 Supp. R. S. 541.

See SHIP; PART-OWNERS; FOREIGN VESSEL SURVEY OF A VESSEL.

VESSEL OR OTHER CONVEYANCE. Not appropriate to describe the plant of a toll-bridge. 257 U. S. 512.

VEST. To give an immediate fixed right of present or future enjoyment. An estate is vested in possession when there exists a right of present enjoyment; and an estate is vested in interest when there is a present fixed right of future enjoyment. Fearn, Cont. Rem. 2.

VESTED ESTATE. A vested estate, whether present or future, may be absolutely or defeasibly vested. 89 Mich. 428.

VESTED INTEREST.

See VESTED ESTATE, OF INTEREST; VESTED REMAINDER.

VESTED LEGACY. A legacy, the right to which vests permanently in the legatee, though the legacy is not payable until a future time.

VESTED IN POSSESSION. An estate is vested in possession when there exists a right of present enjoyment.

The interest in a fund transferred from an estate to a trustee for ascertained persons is vested in possession no less than when it is conveyed directly to them, for the purposes of the tax-refunding Act of June 27, 1902. 251 U. S. 395. See VEST.

VESTED REMAINDER. An estate by which a present interest passes to the party, though to be enjoyed in future, and by which the estate is invariably fixed to remain to a determinate person after the particular estate has been spent. 2 Bouvier, Inst. n. 1881. It imports, ex vi termini, a present title in the remainderman; 112 N. C. 1. See REMAINDER; Tudor, L. Cas. R. P. 820.

VESTIGIAL WORDS. Those contained in a statute which by reason of a succession of statutes on the same subject-matter, amending or modifying previous provisions of the same, are rendered useless or meaningless by such amendments. 164 U. S. 70.

VESTIMENTUM (L. Lat.). A figurative expression denoting the character, quality or circumstance of right.

VESTING ORDER. An order which may be granted by the chancery division of the high court of justice (and formerly by chancery) passing the legal estate in lieu of a conveyance.

VESTIRE (L. Lat.). To deliver full possession of land or of an estate.

VESTRY. The place in a church where the priest's vestments are deposited. Also, an assembly of the minister, church wardens, and parishioners, held in the vestry of the church. In America, a body elected by a church congregation to administer the affairs of the church. See Baum, Church Law.

VESTURE OF LAND. A phrase including all things, trees excepted, which grow upon the surface of the land and clothe it externally.

He who has the vesture of land has a right, generally, to exclude others from entering upon the superficies of the soil.

Co. Litt. 4 b; Hamm. N. P. 151. See 7 East 200.

VETERA STATUTA (Lat.). The name of vetera statuta—ancient statutes—has been given to the statutes commencing with Magna Charta and ending with those of Edward II. Crabb, Eng. Law 222.

VETERINARY SURGEON. One who treats domestic animals for injuries or diseases. The same rules are applicable to the case of a veterinary surgeon bringing an action to recover for the value of his services as are applicable to other surgeons; 69 Hun 428. He must possess and exercise a reasonable degree of learning and skill, and use reasonable and ordinary care and diligence in the exercise of his skill and the application of his knowledge; 69 Hun 428; 10 id. 858; 29 Neb. 352; 48 Vt. 657. See PHYSICIAN.

VETITUM NAMIUM (Law Lat. vetitum, forbidden, namium, taking). Where the bailiff of a lord distrains beasts or goods of another, and the lord forbids the bailiff to deliver them when the sheriff comes to make replevin, the owner of the cattle may demand satisfaction in placitum de vetito namio. Co. 2d Inst. 140; 2 Bla. Com. 148. See WITHERNAM; 2 Poll. & Matil. 575.

VETO (Lat. I forbid). A term including the refusal of the executive officer whose assent is necessary to perfect a law which has been passed by the legislative body, and the message which is usually sent, stating such refusal and the reasons therefor. See EXECUTIVE POWER.

By the constitution of the United States government, the president has a power to prevent the enactment of any law, by refusing to sign the same after its passage, unless it be subsequently enacted by a vote of two-thirds of each house. U. S. Const. art. 1, § 7. When a bill is engrossed, and has received the sanction of both houses, it is transmitted to the president for his approbation. If he approves of it, he signs it. If he does not, he sends it, with his objections, to the house in which it originated, and that house enters the objections on the journal and proceeds to reconsider the bill. See Story, Const. § 673; 1 Kent, Comm. 586. Similar powers are possessed by the governors of many of the states. See STATUTE.

The veto power of the British sovereign has not been exercised for more than a century. It was exercised once during the reign of Queen Anne. 10 Edinburgh Rev. 411; Parks, Lect. 136. But apparently the king frequently replied, Le roi s'avise, which was in effect withholding his assent. In France the king had the initiative of all laws, but not the veto. See 1 Toullier, n. 39, 43, 53, note 1.

VEXATION. The injury or damage which is suffered in consequence of the tricks of another.

VEXATIOUS ACTIONS ACT. An act of parliament of 1896, authorizing the high court to order, on the application of the attorney-general, that a person shown to be habitually and vexatiously litigious, without reasonable ground, shall not institute legal proceedings in that or any other court, without leave of that court or a judge thereof, upon satisfactory proof that such legal proceedings are not an abuse of the process of the court and that there is prima facie ground therefor. The order when made is published in the Gazette. See 76 L. T. 351.

VEXATIOUS INDICTMENTS ACT. See VEXATIOUS.

VEXATIOUS SUIT. Torts. A suit which has been instituted maliciously, and without probable cause, whereby a damage has ensued to the defendant.

The suit is either a criminal prosecution, a conviction before a magistrate, or a civil action. The suit need not be altogether without foundation: if the part which is groundless has subjected the party to an inconvenience to which he would not have been exposed had the valid causes of complaint alone been insisted on, it is injurious; 4 Co. 14; 1 Pet. C. C. 210; 4 S. & R. 19, 23.

To make it vexatious the suit must have been instituted maliciously. See MALICIOUS PROSECUTION; FAIR IMPRISONMENT.

VEXED QUESTION. A question or point of law often discussed or agitated, but not determined or settled.

VI ET ARMIS (Lat.). With force and arms. See TRESPASS.

VI AUT CLAM (Lat.). By force, or covertly.

VIBONORUM RAPTORUM (Lat.). Of goods taken away by force.

VI BONORUM RAPTORUM, AC-TIO. See RES ADIRATAE.

VI METUQUE. See FORCE AND FEAR.

VIA (Lat.). A cart-way,—which also includes a foot-way and a horse-way. See WAY.

VIABILITY (from the French vie). Capability of living. A term used to denote the power a new-born child possesses of continuing its independent existence.

That a child may be viable, it is necessary that not only the organs should be in a normal state, but likewise all the physiological and pathological causes which are capable of opposing the establishment or prolongation of its life be absent.

Although a child may be born with every appearance of health, yet, from some malformation, it may not possess the physical power to maintain life, but which must cease from necessity. Under these circumstances, it cannot be said to exist but temporarily,—no longer, indeed, than is necessary to prove that a continued existence is impossible.

It is important to make a distinction between a viable and a non-viable child, although the latter may outlive the former. The viable child may die of some disease on the day of its birth, while a non-viable child may live a fortnight. The former possesses the organs essential to life, in their integrity; while the latter has some imperfection which prevents the complete establishment of life.

As there is no evidence of non-viability that a child dies within a few hours of its birth, neither is it a proof of viability if a child appears to be well and the function of respiration be fully established.

There are many affections which a child may have at birth, that are not necessarily mortal: such as transposition of some of the organs, and other malformations. There are also many diseases which, without being necessarily mortal, are an impediment to the establishment of independent life, affecting different parts of the system: such as inflammation, in addition to many malformations. There is a third class, in which are many affections that are necessarily mortal: such as a general softening of the mucous membrane of the stomach and intestines, developed before birth, or the absence of the stomach, and a number of other malformations. These distinctions are of great importance; for children affected by peculiarities of the first order must be considered as viable; affections of the second may constitute extenuating circumstances in questions of infanticide; while those of the third admit of no discussion on the subject of their viability.

The question of viability presents itself to the medical jurist under two aspects: first, with respect to infanticide, and second, with respect to testamentary grants and inheritances. Billard on Infants, translation by James Stewart, M.D., Appendix; Briand, Méd. Lég. 1ère partie, c. 6, art. 3; See Savigny, Dr. Rom. Append. III., for a learned discussion of this subject.

VIALE. See VIABILITY.

VICAR. One who acts in the place of another. See PARISH PRIEST.

VICARAGE. In Ecclesiastical Law. The living or benefice of a vicar: usually consisting of the small tithes. 1 Burn, Ecc. Law 75, 79.

VICARIUS (Lat. from vici, place or stead.). A deputy; a substitute; one who acts in the place of another. Burrill.

In the Civil Law. The slave of a slave. Id.; Dig. 33. 8. 6. 3.

In Old European Law. The deputy of a count; a vicount. Id.

VICARIUS APOSTOLICUS. An officer through whom the Pope exercises authority in parts remote, and who is sometimes sent with episcopal functions into provinces where there is no bishop resident or there has been a long vacancy in the see, or into infidel or heretical countries. 2 Phill. Int. L. 529.

VICE. A term used in the civil law and in Louisiana, by which is meant a defect in a thing; an imperfection. For example, epilepsy in a slave, roaring and crib-biting in a horse. Redhibitory vices are those for which the seller will be compelled to annul a sale and take back the thing sold. Pothier, Vente 203; La. Civ. Code, art. 2498.

VICE-ADMIRAL. The title of a naval officer next in rank after an admiral.

Under 8. S. § 1293 it was provided that the grades of admiral and vice-admiral in the United States navy should not be filled and that when a vacancy occurred the grades should cease to exist.

VICE-ADMIRAL OF THE COAST. A county officer in England appointed by the admiral "to be answerable to the high admiral for all the coasts of the sea, when need and occasion shall be." He also had power to arrest ships, when found within a certain district, for the use of the king. His office was judicial as well as ministerial. The appointment to the office is still made for a few countries of England. For a detailed account of this office and its functions, see "The Office of Vice-Admiral of the Coast," by Sir G. Sherston Baker.

VICE-ADMIRALTY COURTS. Courts established in the queen's possessions beyond the seas, with jurisdiction over maritime causes, including those relating to prize. 3 Bl. Com. 69.

VICE-CHANCELLOR. A judge, as assistant to the chancellor.

He held a separate court, and his decrees were liable to be reversed by the chancellor. He was first appointed 33 Geo. III. In 1841 two additional vice-chancellors were appointed; and there were then three vice-chancellors' courts. 3 Sharsw. Bl. Com. 84, n.

There is also a vice-chancellor of the county palatine of Lancaster 9 Steph. Com. 331. By the Judicature Act of 1873, the vice-chancellors were transferred to the high court of justice and appointed judges of the chancery division, and on their death or retirement their successors were styled judges of her majesty's high court of justice. There is one vice-chancellor in Ireland. The office exists in New Jersey. See CHANCELLOR; CHANCELLOR'S COURTS IN THE TWO UNIVERSITIES.

VICE-CONSUL. An officer who performs the duties of a consul within a part of the district of a consul, or who acts in the place of a consul. He is not a deputy, but an acting consul; 33 Fed. Rep. 163. See 1 Phil. Ev. 806; CONSUL.

VICE-PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES. The title of the second officer, in point of rank, in the government of the United States.

As to his election, see PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES. His office is pointed out in executive order with that of the president. The constitution of the United States, art. I, § 2, clause 4, directs that "the vice-president of the United States shall be president of the senate, but shall have no vote unless they be equally divided." And by article 2, § 1, clause 6, it is provided that "in case of the removal of the president from office, or of his death, resignation, or inability to discharge the powers and duties of the said office, the same shall devolve on the vice-president."

When the vice-president exercises the office of president, he is called the President of the United States.

VICE-PRINCIPAL. See MASTER AND SERVANT.

VICE VERSA (Lat.). On the contrary; on opposite sides.

VICOMES. The sheriff.

VICOMES NON MISIT BREVE (Lat. the sheriff did not send the writ). An entry made on the record when nothing has been done by virtue of a writ which has been directed to the sheriff.

VICINAGE. The neighborhood; the venue. See 36 W. Va. 84; JURY; JURY OF THE VICINAGE.

VICINETUM (Lat.). The neighborhood; vicinage; the venue. Co. Litt. 168 b.

VICINITY. Etymologically, by common understanding, it admits of a wider latitude than proximity or contiguity, and may embrace a more extended space than that lying contiguous to the place in question; and, as applied to towns and other territorial divisions, may embrace those not adjacent; 12 Gray 545; 63 N. H. 246. In a statute authorizing the extension of the street and an appointment of benefits upon lots in the vicinity the term is a relative one and does not denote any particular definite distance from the extension of the street but must be construed according to the circumstances of each case; 18 Pa. 28. The meaning of vicinity of a city must depend upon the size of the city, etc., and its particular surroundings; 62

Mich. 86. See NEIGHBORHOOD.

VICIOUS INTRUSION. In Scotch Law. A meddling with the movables of a deceased, without confirmation or probate of his will or other title. Whart. Lex.

VICONTIEL. Belonging to the sheriff.

VICTORIA. A British colony in Australia. It became a distinct colony in 1831. It has a governor appointed by the crown and a parliament of two houses, one of ninety-five members and one of forty-eight, both elected by the people. It has a supreme court presided over by a chief justice and five puisne judges, a court of insolvency, courts of assize and general sessions, county courts, and courts of mines. See AUSTRALIA.

VIDELICET (Lat.). A Latin adverb, signifying to wit, that is to say, namely; scilicet. This word is usually abbreviated viz.

The office of the videlicet is to mark that the party does not undertake to prove the precise circumstances alleged; and in such cases he is not required to prove them; Steph. Pl. 809; 7 Cow. 42; 8 Taunt. 107; Greenl. Ev. § 60; 1 Litt. Ky. 209. See Yelv. 94; 3 Saund. 291 a, note; 4 B. & P. 465; 2 Pick. 214; 47 Ill. 175.

VIDIMUS (L. Lat.). We have seen.

VIDUITY. Widowhood.

VIEW. Inspection; a prospect.

See ANCIENT LIGHTS; NUISANCE; VIEWERS; 16 Am. L. Rev. 628; 63 Me. 885.

VIEW, DEMAND OF. In most real and mixed actions, in order to ascertain the identity of land claimed with that in the tenant's possession, the tenant is allowed, after the demandant has counted, to demand a view of the land in question, or, if the subject of claim be rent, or the like, a view of the land out of which it issues. Com. Dig. View; 2 Saund. 43 b.

This right, however, is confined to real or mixed actions; for in personal actions the view does not lie. In the action of dower unde nihil habet, it has been much questioned whether the view be demandable or not; 3 Saund. 44, n. 4; and there are other real and mixed actions in which it is not allowed. The view being granted, the course of proceeding was to issue a writ commanding the sheriff to cause the defendant to have a view of the land. The duty of giving out the writ lies upon the demandant; and when the sheriff causes view to be made, the demandant is to show to the tenant in all ways possible, the thing in demand, with its metes and bounds. On the return of the writ into court, the demandant must count de novo—that is, declare again; Com. Dig. Pleader (3 Y 3); and the pleadings proceed to issue. This proceeding of demanding view is, in the present rarity of real actions, unknown in practice. It is said in 141 U. S. 351, that there are only two cases in the books [1 Arn. 844; 8 Dowl. Pr. c. 201] where orders to inspect a building were requested. Both were refused.

The right to grant an application for the jury to view the premises during the trial of a case rests in the discretion of the trial judge; 93 Wis. 81; 17 Colo. 448; 110 N. C. 439; 95 Mich. 586; 41 Ill. App. 584; 4 Wash. 436. Where the facts are such that they can be accurately described to the jury the court may properly deny a request to view the premises; 4 Ind. App. 100; also where a motion is made to have the jury view the scene of an accident several years after it happened, and where the condition of the premises had changed in the meanwhile; 89 Mich. 815. In Pennsylvania (act of 1895), in proceedings under eminent domain, either party may require a view of the premises.

Where, on a trial for murder, the jury viewed the locus of the crime, but the accused, at his special request, did not accompany them, the court held that the view was not a part of the trial, and the conviction was affirmed. Authority and reason are said to be the other way; 12 Harv. L. Rev. 212, citing 48 Hun 401; 68 Cal. 623.

See PHYSICAL EXAMINATION.

VIEW OF FRANKPLEDGE. An examination to see if every freeman within the district had taken the oath of allegiance, and found nine freemen pledges for his peaceable demeanor. 1 Reeve. Hist. Eng. Law 7. It took place, originally, once in each year, after Michaelmas, and subsequently twice, after Easter and Michaelmas, at the sheriff's tourn or court-leet at that season held. See COURT-LEET; SHERIFF'S TOURN.

VIEWERS. Persons appointed by the courts to see and examine certain matters and make a report of the facts, together with their opinion, to the court. In practice, they are usually appointed to lay out roads, and the like.

VIFGAGE. See VADIM VIVUM.

VIGILANCE. Proper attention in proper time.

The law requires a man who has a claim to enforce it in proper time, while the adverse party has it in his power to defend himself; and if by his neglect to do so he cannot afterwards establish such claim, the maxim vigilantibus non dormientibus leges subvenit acquires full force in such case. See LACHES.

VIIS ET MODIS (L. Lat.). By ways and means.

VILL. In England this word was used to signify the parts into which a hundred or wapentake was divided. Fortescue, de Laud. c. 24. See Co. Litt. 115 b. It also signifies a town or city. Barrington, Stat. 188.

VILLAGE. Any small assemblage of houses for dwellings or business, or both, in the country, whether they are situated upon regularly laid out streets and alleys, or not. 27 Ill. 48, approved in 71 id. 569. See 80 Mich. 410; 35 L. R. A. 396, n.; TOWN.

VILLAGER. An actual settler driven into a station for safety is not to be considered a "villager." Hughes (Ky.) 42.

VILLAIN. An epithet used to cast contempt and contumely on the person to whom it is applied. To call a man a villain in a letter written to a third person will entitle him to an action without proof of special damages. 1 B. & P. 381.

VILLEIN (vilis, base or villa, estate). A person attached to a manor, who was substantially in the condition of a slave, who performed the base and menial work upon the manor for the lord, and was, generally, a subject of property and belonging to him. 1 Washb. R. P. 26.

The feudal villein of the lowest order was unprotected as to property, and subject to the most ignoble services. But his circumstances were very different from the slave of the Southern states, for no person was in the eye of the law a villein except as to his master; in relation to all other persons he was a freeman. Littleton, Ten. ss. 189, 190.

VILLEIN IN GROSS. A villein annexed to the person of the lord, and transferable by deed from one person to another. Littleton § 181.

VILLEIN REGARDANT. A villein annexed to the manor or land; a serf.

VILLEIN SOCAGE (Sax. soc, free, or Lat. soca, a plough). The villeins, from living on one piece of land, came at last to be allowed to hold it by tenure of villeinage, e. g. uncertain menial services. These services at last became fixed; the tenure was then called villein socage. 1 Washb. R. P. 26.

VILLEINAGE. See VILLEIN SOCAGE.

VILLENIOUS JUDGMENT. In Old English Law. A judgment given by the common law in attainr, or in cases of conspiracy. Its effects were to make the object of it lose his liberam legem and become infamous. He forfeited his goods and chattels, and his lands during life; and this barbarous judgment further required that his lands should be wasted, his houses razed, his trees rooted up, and that his body should be cast into prison. He could not be a juror or witness. 4 Bla. Com. 188.

VINCULO MATRIMONII. See A VINCULO MATRIMONII; DIVORCE.

VINCULUM. A chain; a connected series; a connection or relation. A bond; a band; a tie. Burrill. A binding force of law. Id.; Bract. fol. 99. See JURIS VINCULUM.

VINCULUM JURIS. See JURIS VINCULUM.

VINCULUM MATRIMONII. The bond or tie of marriage; the matrimonial obligation. Burrill. See JURIS VINCULUM.

VINDICTIVE. See PUNITIVE.

VINDICTIVE DAMAGES. See DAMAGES; EXEMPLARY DAMAGES.

VINOUS LIQUORS. See SPIRITUOUS LIQUORS.

VINTNER. One who sells wine. A covenant prohibiting the trade of a vintner includes a person selling wines not to be drunk on the premises. 25 L. T. N. S. 312.

VIOLATION. An act done unlawfully and with force. In the English statute of 25 Edw. III. st. 5, c. 2, it is declared to be high treason in any person who shall violate the king's companion; and it is equally high treason in her to suffer willingly such violation. This word has been construed under this statute to mean carnal knowledge. 8 Inst. 9; Bacon, Abr. Treason (E).

VIOLENCE. The abuse of force. That force which is employed against common right, against the laws, and against public liberty. Merl. Répert.

Violence is synonymous with physical force, and the two are used interchangeably, in relation to assaults, by elementary writers on criminal law. 31 Conn. 212. See ASSAULT; ROBBERY.

VIOLENT. Not natural or spontaneous, not intentional, voluntary, expected or usual. 44 Hun 606.

VIOLENT OR ACCIDENTAL DEATH. See DEATH.

VIOLENT PRESUMPTION. Evidence, whether written or oral, is either positive or presumptive. Positive evidence is the direct proof of the fact or point at issue; presumptive evidence consists in the proof of some other fact or facts, from which the point in issue may be inferred. If the connection be found by experience and observation to be invariable in all instances, the "presumption" is what in law is denominated "violent," and is equal to full proof. 2 Bibb. (Ky.) 239.

VIOLENT PROFITS. In Scotch Law. The gains made by a tenant holding over are so called. Erskine, Inst. 2. 6. 54.

VIOLENT, UNUSUAL AND UNNECESSARY. In describing the negligent movement of a train the instruction should have used the terms "violent, unusual and unnecessary," which are commonly used in such instructions, instead of the terms quick, and violent and sudden and unusual. 156 Ky. 415, 161 S. W. 246.

VIOLENTLY. In Pleading. This word was formerly supposed to be necessary in an indictment, in order to charge a robbery from the person; but it has been held unnecessary; 1 Chitty, Crim. Law *244. The words "feloniously and against the will," usually introduced in such indictments, seem to be sufficient. It is usual, also, to aver a putting in fear; though this does not seem to be requisite.

VIRE. See INTRA VIRE; ULTRA VIRE.

VIRGA. An obsolete word, which signifies a rod or staff, such as sheriffs, bailiffs, and constables carry as a badge or ensign of their office. More commonly, spelled verge, q. v. Hence verger, one who carried a white wand before the judges. Toml. A verger now commonly signifies an inferior officer in a cathedral or parish church. Moz. & W.

The stick or wand with which persons are in England admitted as tenants.

VIRGATA TERRAE. A yard-land; a measure of land of variable quantity, containing in some places twenty, in others, twenty-four, in others, thirty, and in others, forty acres. Burrill; Cowell.

VIRGINIA. One of the thirteen original United States.

The name was given to the colony in honor of Queen Elizabeth. In 1606, James I. granted letters patent for planting colonies in Virginia. The government prescribed was that each should have a council, consisting of thirteen persons, appointed by the king, to govern and order all matters according to laws and instructions given them by the king. There was also a council in England, of thirteen persons, appointed by the crown to have the supervising, managing, and direction of all matters that should concern the government of the colonies. This charter was followed by royal instructions dated the 20th November, 1606. See 1 Henning, Va. Stat. 76, 371. Under this charter a settlement was made at Jamestown in 1607, by the first colony. Upon the petition of the company, a new charter was granted by king James, on the 23d May, 1609, to the treasurer and company of the first (or southern) colony for the further enlargement and explanation of the privileges of that company. 1 Henning, Stat. 80.

This charter granted to the company in absolute property the lands extending from Cape or Point Comfort (at the mouth of James River) along the sea-coast two hundred miles to the northward, and from the same point along the sea-coast two hundred miles to the southward, and up into the land throughout, from sea to sea, west and northwest, and, also, all islands lying within one hundred miles of the coast of both seas of the precinct aforesaid. A new council in England was established, with power to the company, to fill all vacancies therein by election.

On the 12th of March, 1614, king James granted a third charter to the first company, enlarging its domain so as to include all islands within three hundred leagues from its borders on the coast of either sea. In 1612, a considerable proportion of lands previously held and cultivated in common was divided into three-acre lots and a lot appropriated in absolute right to each individual. Not long afterwards, fifty acres were surveyed and delivered to each of the colonists. In 1618, by a change of the constitution of the colony, burgesses elected by the people made a breach of the legislative whip to this time the settlement had been gradually increasing in number, and in 1624, upon a writ of quo warranto, a judgment was obtained dissolving the company and vesting its power in the crown. In 1616 the plantation of Virginia, by the usual right, under the obedience and government of the commonwealth of England, the colony, however, still retaining its former constitution. A new charter was to be granted, and many important privileges were secured. In 1650 a change was made in the colonial government, the burgesses of the exercise of judicial power in the last resort, as had before that time been practised by that body and allowing appeals from judgments of the general courts, composed of the governor and council, to the king in council, where the matter in controversy exceeded the value of £200 sterling. Marshall, Col. 163; 1 Canpb. 387.

By the treaty of 1763, all the conquests made by the French in North America, including the territory east of the Mississippi, were ceded to Great Britain.

The constitution of the colonial government of Virginia seems never to have been precisely fixed and accurately adjusted in any written memorials that are now accessible. The powers exercised by the burgesses varied at different periods. The periods of their election and the length of their term, not, indeed, in office it is difficult to ascertain from the records of colonial history, and the qualifications of voters to elect them varied much at different periods. See Rev. Code 38, Leigh's note; 2 Burk, App. 1. On the 12th of June, 1776, a declaration of rights pertaining to the people, as a basis and foundation of government, was adopted by the convention. This declaration still remains a part of the Virginia Code. On the 30th of June, 1776, Virginia adopted a constitution by a unanimous vote of the convention. The Articles of Confederation were not finally adopted by congress until the 15th of November, 1777, and were adopted, subject to the ratification of the states. These articles were laid before the Virginia Assembly on the 9th of December, 1777, and on the 15th unanimously assented to. In compliance with the recommendation of congress, by a resolution of September 6, 1780, Virginia, by an act passed the 2d of January, 1781, proffered a cessation of her western lands. The cession was finally completed and accepted in 1784. Virginia as early as 1785 prepared to erect two new states, and this was finally effected in July, 1788. The state constitution framed and adopted by Virginia in 1776 gave way to a second that was framed in convention, adopted by the people, and went into operation in 1800. This second constitution was superseded by a third, which was framed in convention of 1851, and, being adopted by the people, took effect in 1862.

A convention assembled at Alexandria February 13, 1864, composed of delegates from such portions of Virginia as were then within the lines of the Union army and had not been included in the recently formed state of West Virginia. This convention adopted a constitution April 11, 1864, but it was not submitted to the people for ratification. The present constitution of the state was framed by a convention called under the reconstruction act of congress which met at Richmond and completed its labors in 1869. Under the authority of an act of congress approved April 10, 1869, the instrument was submitted to the vote of the people and adopted.

VIRILIA (Lat.). The privy members of a man, to cut off which was felony at common law, though the party consented to it. Bract. lib. 3, p. 144.

VIRTUTE CUJUS (Lat.). By virtue whereof.

VIRTUTE OFFICII (Lat.). By virtue of his office. A sheriff, a constable, and some other officers may virtute officii apprehend a man who has been guilty of a crime in their presence.

VIS (Lat. force). Any kind of force, violence, or disturbance relating to a man's person or his property.

VIS COMPULSIVA. Compulsive force: that which is exerted to compel another to do an act against his will.

VIS DIVINA (Lat.). Divine or superhuman force; the act of God.

VIS EXPULSIVA (Lat.). Expulsive force; force used to expel another, or put him out of his possession.

VIS IMPRESSA (Lat.). Immediate force; original force. This phrase is applied to cases of trespass when a question arises whether an injury has been caused by a direct force or one which is indirect. When the original force, or vis impressa, had ceased to act before the injury commenced, then there is no force, the effect is mediate, and the proper remedy is trespass on the case.

When the injury is immediate consequence of the force, or vis proxima, trespass vi et armis lies; 3 Bouvier, Inst. n. 3498.

VIS MAJOR (Lat.). A superior force. In law it signifies inevitable accident.

This term is used in the civil law in nearly the same way that the words act of God (q. v.) are used in the common law, but for some purposes it is a wider phrase; 1 C. P. Div. 429. Generally, no one is responsible for an accident which arises from the vis major; but a man may be so where he has stipulated that he would, and when he has been guilty of a fraud or deceit; 2 Kent 448.

A loss by vis major is one that results immediately from a natural cause without the intervention of man, and could not have been prevented by the exercise of prudence, diligence, and care. 17 U. S. App. 528. See UNFORESEEN EVENT; ACT OF GOD; PERIL OF THE SEA.

VISA. In Civil Law. The formula put upon an act; a register; a commercial book, in order to approve of it and authenticate it.

VISCOUNT (Lat. vice-comes). This name was made use of as an arbitrary title of honor, without any office pertaining to it, by Henry VI. for the first time. The sheriff or earl's deputy holds the office of vice-comes, of which viscount is a translation, but used, as we have just seen, in a different sense. The dignity of a viscount is next to an earl. 1 Bla. Com. 397.

WISE. To endorse officially. The endorsement by an official certifying that a document has been examined and is correct. English.

VISIGOTHORUM, LEX ROMANA.

See LEX ROMANA VISIGOTHORUM.

VISIT, RIGHT OF. In International Law. A term used on the continent of Europe as synonymous with the right of search (q. v.). See 11 Wheat. 42.

VISITATION. The act of examining into the affairs of a corporation.

Inspection; direction; regulation. In the law of nations the right of visitation is sometimes called the right of visit. The right of visit is conceded for the sole purpose of ascertaining the real national character of a vessel sailing under suspicious circumstances, and is wholly distinct from the right of search.

The power of visitation is applicable only to ecclesiastical and eleemosynary corporations. 1 Bla. Com. 480. The visitation of civil corporations is by the government itself, through the medium of the courts of justice. See 2 Kent 240. In the United States, the legislature is the visitor of all corporations founded by it for public purposes; 4 Wheat. 518. See VISIT; SEARCH, RIGHT OF.

VISITATION BOOKS. Compilations made out or collected by the heralds in the circuits which their commissions authorized them to make, for the purpose of inquiring into the state of families and registering marriages and descents which were verified to them by oath. They are good evidence of pedigree. 3 Bla. Com. 105.

VISITER, or VISITOR. An inspector of the government, of corporations, or bodies politic. 1 Bla. Com. 482.

VISNE. The neighborhood; a neighboring place; a place near at hand; the venue.

The district from which juries were drawn at common law. 38 W. Va. 84.

Formerly the visne was confined to the immediate neighborhood where the cause of action arose, and many verdicts were disturbed because the visne was too large, which becoming a great grievance, several statutes were passed to remedy the evil. The 21 James I. c. 18, gives aid after verdict, where the visne is partly wrong,—that is, where it is warded out of too many or too few places in the county named. The 10 & 17 Charles II. c. 8, goes further, and cures defects of the visne wholly, so that the cause is tried by a jury of the proper county. See VENUE.

VITAE AMISSIONIS. See JUDICIUM CAPITALE.

VITAL STATISTICS. Numerical facts, collectively, pertaining to birth, marriage, mortality, and other conditions attending the perpetuation of life. Stand. Dict.

VITIOUS INTROMISSION. In Scotch Law. An unwarrantable intermeddling with the movable estate of a person deceased, without the order of law.

VIVA VOCE (Lat. with living voice). Verbally. It is said a witness delivers his evidence viva voce when he does so in open court: the term is opposed to deposition. It is sometimes opposed to ballot: as, the people vote by ballot, but their representatives in the legislature vote viva voce.

VIVARY. A place where living things are kept; as, a park on land; or, in the water, as a pond.

VIVISECTION. No person employed in any school, except medical or dental schools in the State of Washington, shall practise vivisection upon any vertebrate animal in the presence of any pupil, or any child or minor, nor, in such presence, exhibit any vertebrate animal upon which vivisection has been practised. And the dissection of dead animals shall be confined to the class-room and the presence of these pupils engaged in the study to be illustrated thereby, the penalty is by fine of not less than fifty nor more than one hundred dollars. Act, February 17, 1897.

In Massachusetts, by the act of March 22, 1894, vivisection in the public schools is prohibited, and dissection is confined to certain classes, under penalty of a fine.

In England, by 39 & 40 Vict. c. 77, public exhibitions of vivisection are forbidden, and stringent rules are given under which it may be done for the benefit of science if the subject is under the influence of some anæsthetic.

VIVUM VADIUM. See VADIUM VIVUM.

VOCARE AD CURIAM (L. Lat.). To summon to court.

VOCATIO IN JUS (Lat.). In Roman Law. According to the practice in the legis actiones of the Roman law, a person having a demand against another verbally cited him to go with him to the prætor: in jus eamus; in jus te voco. This was denominated vocatio in jus. If a person thus summoned refused to go, he could be compelled by force to do so, unless he found a vindex,—that is, procurator, or a person to undertake his cause. When the parties appeared before the prætor, they went through the particular formalities required by the action applicable to the cause. If the cause was not ended the same day, the parties promised to appear again at another day, which was called vadimonium.

VOCIFEROUS. In a statute forbidding the use of loud and vociferous language, making a loud outcry; clamorous; noisy. Webster; 20 S. W. Rep. (Tex.) 850.

VOID. That which has no force or effect. This word is often used in effect meaning "voidable" only; 110 Ind. 202; and is seldom, unless in a very clear case, to be regarded as implying a complete nullity, but is to be taken in a legal sense, subject to a large qualification in view of all the circumstances calling for its application and the rights and interest to be affected in a given case; 50 N. H. 552. See 50 Mo. 287. In formal instruments it has been held to mean voidable; 4 B. & Ald. 401; 4 Bing N. C. 395; and in contracts of infants; 14 Ir. C. L. 81. The distinction between void and voidable transactions is a fundamental one, though it is often obscured by carelessness of language. An act or agreement void from the beginning has no legal effect at all except so far as any party to it incurs penal consequences. A voidable act on the contrary takes its full and proper legal effect unless, and until it is disputed, and set aside by some tribunal entitled so to do; Poll. Contr. 8. A voidable contract has been defined to be such an agreement as that one of the parties is entitled at his option to treat as never having been binding on him; id. 9. As applied to contracts the distinction between the terms void and voidable is often one of great practical importance, and wherever technical accuracy is required, the term void can only be properly applied to such contracts as are a mere nullity and incapable of ratification or confirmation; 6 Mete. 417. Agreements to hinder, delay, and defraud creditors are not void but merely voidable against the creditors, while valid between the parties; Pom. Contr. § 282.

The distinction between contracts which are illegal and those which are void has never been precisely worked out, but where a contract is merely void, its defect in this respect cannot affect collateral transactions otherwise in themselves valid, while an unlawful purpose taints collateral and innocent transactions; 7 L. Quart. Rev. 339. The general rule of law is that a contract made in violation of a statute is void; 145 U. S. 428, and cases cited. Contracts which are void at common law, because they are against public policy, like contracts prohibited by statute, are illegal as well as void; 150 Mass. 1. An illegal contract is as a rule not merely voidable but void, and can be the basis of no judicial proceeding. See ULTRA VIRES.

Among the contracts made illegal by statute are: those relating to usury; 5 Johns. Ch. 122; gaming contracts (see GAMING); wager contracts (see WAGER); those which tend to promote champerty and maintenance (q. v.), or those compounding felonies or suppressing public prosecution of criminals; 3 P. Wms. 276. See 31 Am. L. Rev. 19, as to the validity of contracts of foreign corporations, where by statute they are prohibited from doing business in the state.

A contract binding the maker to do something opposed to the public policy of the state or nation, or which conflicts with the wants, interest, or prevailing sentiment of the people, or our obligations to the world, or is repugnant to the morals of the times, is void, however solemnly the same may be made; Greenh. Pub. Pol. Rule II., citing 30 Maine 402; 17 Vt. 105; and though made in another country where its validity is undoubted; L. R. 14 Ch. D. 351 (see LEX LOCI). The assignor of a contract has no better rights therein than the party to it, even if he had no notice of its illegality; 127 Mass. 123.

Among those contrary to public policy and illegal at common law are contracts in restraint of marriage or of trade, or of bidding at public auctions, or relating to marriage brokerage, to hinder legislation, whether public or private (see LOBBYING), or to promote the appointment of a party to an office, to influence public elections to office, or to remunerate officers in addition to their lawful fees for acts which they are bound to do by virtue of their office or to assign fees and profits of official positions requiring personal supervision (see OFFICER); or any contract involving the sale of personal influence; 103 U. S. 276; 66 Fed. Rep. 427; a contract by a mother surrendering her child to a charitable institution; 6 Dist. Rep. Pa. 256; contracts where the consideration is the commission of some crime or some flagrantly immoral act (see CONSIDERATION); Pom. Contr. § 282. See the various subjects enumerated for cases. As to the effect of war upon contracts, see WAR.

As to particular cases, see the several titles upon the subjects involved.

See BECOME VOID; NULL AND VOID.

VOID AND VOIDABLE SALES. Distinction. There is no distinction between "void" and "voidable" judgments where the purchaser is asking to be released from his bid before his bond is paid, as the court will not compel the purchaser to accept title under a judgment that can thereafter be set aside. 12 Bush (Ky.) 202.

VOIDABLE. See VOID.

VOIR. Truth; the truth.

VOIR DIRE. A preliminary examination of a witness to ascertain whether he is competent.

When a witness is supposed to have an interest in the cause, the party against whom he is called has the choice to prove such interest by calling another witness to that fact, or he may require the witness produced to be sworn in his voir dire as to whether he has an interest in the cause or not; but the party against whom he is called will not be allowed to have recourse to both methods to prove the witness's interest. If the witness answers he has no interest, he is competent, his oath being conclusive; if he swears he has an interest, he will be rejected.

Though this is the rule established beyond the power of the courts to change, it seems not very satisfactory. The witness is sworn on his voir dire to ascertain whether he has an interest which would disqualify him, because he would be tempted to perjure himself if he testified when interested. But when he is asked whether he has such an interest, if he is dishonest and anxious to be sworn in the case, he will swear falsely he has none, and, his answer being conclusive, he will be admitted as competent; if, on the contrary, he swears truly he has an interest, when he knows that will exclude him, he is told that for being thus honest he must be rejected. A suitable inquiry is permissible in order to ascertain whether a juror has any bias and this must be conducted under the supervision of the court and be largely left to its sound discretion. There is no objection in not allowing a juror to be asked as to his political affiliations and whether they would bias his judgment, in the absence of any statement tending to show a special reason for asking; 158 U. S. 408; a juror may be asked whether he is a member of certain secret societies; 30 S. W. Rep. (Tex.) 1110; or has ever belonged to "the committee of 100"; 158 U. S. 408. The court may assume an exclusive examination of jurors, though it is the better practice to allow counsel to examine; 17 So. Rep. (Fla.) 284.

See 1 Dall. 375; INTEREST; JURY.

VOLENTI NON FIT INJURIA. To the consenting no injury is done. A person who consents to a thing cannot complain of it as an injury. The law regards such person as doing the act himself, and will hold him responsible for the consequences equally with others directly concerned. This maxim applies principally to those cases where a man suffers an injury for which he has a claim for compensation, but which claim he is considered as waiving, by acquiescing in, or not objecting to, the injury committed. The rule also covers those cases where any one receives an injury through his own want of prudence or foresight. Abbott; Whart. Max.

The import of the maxim is, that that which, unauthorized, would amount to wrongful injury, subjecting the doer of it to an action for damages by the person injured, loses such character if the person suffering the disadvantage or injury consents to the act. The peculiar signification of the word "injuria"—implying a wrong—should be borne in mind in considering the application of the maxim. Id.

VOLSTEAD ACT. See NATIONAL PROHIBITION ACT.

VOLUNTARILY. See CONSTRAINT.

VOLUNTARY. Willingly; done with one's consent; negligently. Wolff § 5.

To render an act criminal or tortious, it must be voluntary. If a man, therefore, kill another without a will on his part while engaged in the performance of a lawful act, and having taken proper care to prevent it, he is not guilty of any crime. And if he commit an injury to the person or property of another, he is not liable for damages, unless the act has been voluntary or through negligence; as, when a collision takes place between two ships without any fault in either. 3 Dods. Adm. 88; 8 Hagg. Adm. 320, 414.

When the crime or injury happens in the performance of an unlawful act, the party will be considered as having acted voluntarily.

VOLUNTARY ACT OF THE WILL. "Voluntary act of the will" necessarily implies liberty and self-control. 6 Bush (Ky.) 271.

VOLUNTARY ASSIGNMENT. See VOLUNTARY CONVEYANCE; 22 Neb. 514.

VOLUNTARY ASSOCIATION. In most states, a voluntary association is not a legal entity. It is not a person who can be sued in courts. It is simply a collection of individuals. 71 Conn. 613 et al. See COLLEGE FRATERNITY.

VOLUNTARY CONVEYANCE. A conveyance without any valuable consideration.

Voluntary conveyances are discussed most frequently with reference to the statutes 13 Eliz. c. 5 (for the protection of creditors) and 27 Eliz. c. 4 (for the protection of subsequent purchasers). A voluntary conveyance, however, is not within these statutes unless it is fraudulent; Cowp. 434. And as between the parties a voluntary conveyance is generally good.

In determining whether a voluntary conveyance is fraudulent and within the statute 13 Eliz. c. 5, a distinction is made between existing (or previous) and subsequent creditors. An existing creditor, so called, is one who is a creditor at the time of the conveyance; and it was at one time held that, as against him, every voluntary conveyance by the debtor is fraudulent; 8 Wheat. 223; without regard to the amount of the debts, the extent of the property in settlement, or the circumstances of the debtor; 3 Johns. Ch. 500; but this rule is now subject to great modifications both in England and in the United States; see 1 Am. L. Cas. 37-40; and the conclusion to be drawn from the more recent cases is that the whole question depends in great measure on the ratio of the debts, not so much to the property the debtor parts with, as to that which he retains; 24 Pa. 511; 2 Beav. 344; 4 Drew. 632. A subsequent creditor is one who becomes a creditor after the conveyance, and, as against him, a voluntary conveyance is not void unless actually fraudulent; 1 Am. L. Cas. 40; but there is great diversity in the definition of the fraud of which he may avail himself; see 3 De G. J. & S. 293; L. R. 5 Ch. Ap. 513; 3 Johns. Ch. 501; 39 Pa. 499; 9 W. N. C. (Pa.) 353.

Whenever a voluntary conveyance is made, a presumption of fraud properly arises upon the statute of 27 Eliz. c. 4, which presumption may be repelled by showing that the transaction on which the conveyance was founded virtually contained some conventional stipulations, some compromise of interests, or reciprocity of benefits, that point out an object and motive beyond the indulgence of affection or claims of kindred, and not reconcilable with the supposition of intent to deceive a purchaser. But, unless so repelled, such a conveyance, coupled with a subsequent negotiation for sale, is conclusive evidence of statutory fraud.

The principles of these statutes, though they may not have been substantially reenacted, prevail throughout the United States. General reference may be made to Hunt, Fraud. Conv.; May, Stats. of Eliz.; Bump, Fraud. Conv.; Note to Twyne's Case, 1 Sm. L. Cas. (cases to 1879 discussed in 18 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 137); Note to Sexton v. Wheaton, 1 Am. L. Cas.; Story, Eq. Jurisp. §§ 350-436.

VOLUNTARY DEPOSIT. See DEPOSIT.

VOLUNTARY ESCAPE. See ESCAPE.

VOLUNTARY EXPOSURE TO UNNECESSARY DANGER. Where the insured was shot when unarmed, in the course of an altercation, it was held that there could be recovery, though the insured may have been the aggressor, if he had no reason to believe that his opponent was armed. The court held that the test was whether the assured "had voluntarily or intentionally done some act which reasonable prudence would have pronounced dangerous and in which death had followed as a consequence;" 40 S. W. Rep. (Tenn.) 1090. Where a party going home at night voluntarily left other and safe paths of travel and used a dangerous railway trestle; 80 Ga. 541; and where the assured sat down on a railway track when an engine moving toward him was only 25 feet away; 133 N. Y. 300; and where the assured jumped in the dark from a freight train in rapid motion; 94 Wis. 180; the exception in the policy was held to apply. But it must be shown that there is on the part of the insured some degree of consciousness of the danger which results in the accidental death of the insured; 92 Tenn. 107; 59 Wis. 13; 84 id. 889; 120 Mo. 104; 61 N. W. Rep. (Ia.) 485. See also 102 Pa. 262.

A voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger implies a conscious, intentional exposure, something of which one is conscious but willing to take the risk. By taking a policy against accident one naturally understands that he is to be protected against accident resulting in whole or in part from his own inadvertence. The phrase means something more than contributory negligence or want of ordinary care on the part of the assured: 62 N. W. Rep. (Ia.) 807. The phrase is not the entire equivalent of ordinary negligence; a degree of consciousness of danger is necessary: 93 Tenn. 187. See INSURANCE.

VOLUNTARY JURISDICTION. In Ecclesiastical Law. That kind of jurisdiction which requires no judicial proceedings: as, the granting letters of administration and receiving the probate of wills.

VOLUNTARY MANSLAUGHTER. See MURDER; MANSLAUGHTER; HOMICIDE.

VOLUNTARY NONSUIT. In Practice. The abandonment of his cause by a plaintiff, and an agreement that a judgment for costs be entered against him. 3 Bouvier, Inst. n. 3806.

VOLUNTARY OATH. In practice. An oath taken in some extra-judicial matter, or before some magistrate, or officer who cannot compel it to be taken. 4 Bl. Com. 137.

VOLUNTARY PAYMENT. A payment made from choice. A voluntary payment is made by the debtor on his own motion, without compulsory process. A payment made upon execution is not, therefore, a voluntary payment. Anderson; 3 McCrary 478.

Payment of an illegal demand with full knowledge of the facts rendering it illegal, without an immediate and urgent necessity therefor, or unless to release or prevent immediate seizure of person or property, is a voluntary payment and not one under duress. 200 U. S. 488.

VOLUNTARY SALE. See SALE.

VOLUNTARY WASTE. See WASTE.

VOLUNTEERS. Persons who receive a voluntary conveyance.

It is a general rule of the courts of equity that they will not assist a mere volunteer who has a defective conveyance. Fonbl. Eq. b. 1, c. 5, s. 2; and see the note there for some exceptions to this rule. See, generally, 1 Madd. 271; 1 Supp. to Ves. Ch. 820; 2 id. 321; Powell, Mortg.

In Military Law. Persons who, in time of war, offer their services to their country and march in its defence.

One who freely enlists in the place of another, and becomes his substitute of his own free will and accord, is a volunteer within the spirit and intent of the statutes; 43 Barb. 239. See MILITIA.

VOTE. Suffrage; the voice of an individual in making a choice by many. The total number of voices given at an election; as, the presidential vote.

In a viu voce election for a public officer, a voter cannot change his vote, once made, after subsequent votes have been made and recorded; 87 S. W. Rep. (Ky.) 155.

In cumulative voting the voter must put opposite the name of the candidate on whom he intends to cumulate something to indicate the number of votes he intends to cast for him, in default of which he will be taken to have cast but a single vote for the candidate against whom he has made a mark, although he has marked but a few names or only one; [1897] 1 Q. B. 449.

See ELECTION; BALLOT; SUFFRAGE; VOTER.

VOTER. One entitled to a vote; an elector. The right to fix the qualifications of voters is in the states, except so far as it is limited by the 15th amendment to the constitution of the United States, which provides that the right of the citizens to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or any state, on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude. The qualifications of voters are similar in all the states, but not uniform. They have been summarized as follows: 1. Citizenship, either by birth or naturalization; 2. Residence for a given period of time in the state, county, and voting precinct; 3. Age, the limit is twenty-one years in all the states; 4. The payment of taxes, in some states, and in many states, registration; 5. Freedom from infamy, of having committed an infamous crime; 6. Freedom from idiocy or lunacy; McCrary, Elect. § 4. Residence means actual settlement within the state; 23 Colo. 99. See also 35 Am. L. Reg. n. s. 780. The legislature cannot require a longer residence for voters at primary elections than the constitution prescribes for voters at elections "authorized by law," which term includes primary elections; 41 L. R. A. (Cal.) 196. A person who is capable of transacting the ordinary business of life, even though laboring under some hallucination or delusion, unless it be shown to extend to political matters, cannot be denied the privilege of voting on the ground of want of mental capacity; 88 Ill. 499. See LOTAL VOTES.

VOTE BEARER. See REGISTRATION CERTIFICATE.

VOTER. See QUALIFIED VOTER.

VOTING. See CUMULATIVE VOTING.

VOTING MACHINE. In Rhode Island, upon the application of the governor, the justices gave an opinion that a statute authorizing the use of a voting machine would be constitutional. 19 R. I. 729, Rogers, J., dissenting. The New York constitution does not interfere with the existing legislation authorizing the use of voting machines. See 150 N. Y. 242.

VOTING TRUST. A term applied to the accumulation in a single hand or in a few hands of shares of corporate stock belonging to several or many owners in order, thereby, to control the business of the company. In some instances the certificates are placed in the hands of a single holder or of a committee, accompanied by irrevocable proxies to vote on them. In other instances the stock is placed in the name of such committee. Certificates are usually issued to the beneficial owners of the stock, and these certificates are bought and sold in the market. It has been held that all agreements to tie up stocks by irrevocable proxies or by placing them in the hands of trustees are illegal, and any beneficial owner may withdraw his stock from them at pleasure; 35 Hun 641; 43 N. Y. Sup. 506; 84 Ala. 608; whether he be a party to the agreement or an assignee of the stock of such party; 60 Conn. 553; 65 Hun 606; 52 N. J. Eq. 178; 6 Co. Ct. R. Pa. 198.

An agreement not to sell stock except by consent of all parties to the agreement is held to be in restraint of trade and void; 85 Hun 461. It has, however, been held that an agreement among the stockholders to hold the stock together and to sell it together is valid; 11 Jones & Sp. 507.

A by-law which provides that if any stockholder shall desire to dispose of his stock, he shall give written notice to the president, and that the stockholders shall then have the option to purchase it at the price named, with an option to the corporation to purchase if the other stockholders decline, is a restraint on the power of alienation and void; 84 Atl. Rep. (Md.) 1127.

Where stock is transferred to a trustee under a contract by which he agrees to hold and vote it for the benefit of two other persons and himself jointly, to dispose of it when and as agreed upon by himself and one of the other parties, the other parties have no such title or right of possession thereof as would give either of them a right of action against the trustee for conversion upon his refusal to transfer to such party one-third of the stock; 75 Fed. Ren. 62.

Where a statute forbade a consolidation of competing lines, the purchase by a railroad company of the stock of a competing line which was then vested in a third party as trustee, was held void and the trustee was enjoined from voting thereon; 50 Fed. Rep. 536.

Where stock was vested in a trustee under an agreement that it was to remain with such trustee for four years, certain stockholders agreeing not to sell their holdings without first offering them to the remaining parties to the agreement, and the trustee holding an irrevocable power of attorney to vote the stock, it was held that the trust agreement was not void per se, and that as long as the beneficial owners did not make any effort to withdraw from the trust there was no reason why the trustee should not vote upon it; 5 Blatch. 535.

The holders of a majority of the stock of a railroad company agreed that it should be vested in the name of the president of another railroad company, who should deliver to an appointee of the directors of the company in question an irrevocable proxy to vote upon such stock; certificates were issued to the stockholders who were parties to the agreement. Certain parties purchased a minority of the trust certificates and requested the return of the stock, which was refused. The court enjoined the trustee from voting on the stock and compelled a transfer to the beneficial owners thereof, holding that the right was vested in the latter and the trustee could not lawfully refuse it to them; 14 Wkly. L. Bull. (Ohio) 68. See 15 id. 419, 423. See also 80 Fed. Rep. 91, substantially to the same effect.

In the Reading railroad trust, reported in 47 Leg. Int. (Phila. C. P.); 26, on the reorganization of the company, certain securities and stock were vested in a reconstruction board under a voting trust, by which certificates of beneficial interest were issued. On a bill by a stockholder to restrain the trustees from voting upon the stock held by them at an election soon to occur, an injunction was refused because the interests were too complicated to permit of interference upon such short notice. The court (Hare, P. J.) was of opinion that the voting trust was necessary to sustain and carry out the provisions of the reorganization and that the voting trustees represented not only the stock but the other securities and liens on the property, under the reorganization.

In 12 So. Rep. 723, the court was of opinion that the cases in which voting trusts were considered illegal were based rather upon the ground of the unlawful purpose for which they were created than upon their intrinsic illegality, and it reached substantially the same result as the Reading railroad case cited above.

Where certain stock was deposited by various stockholders with a firm of bankers for the purpose of arranging differences between preferred and common stockholders and to aid in the adjustment of the affairs of the company generally, it was held that such depository was entitled to vote on such stock; 49 Ohio St. 669.

See 44 Am. L. Reg. & Rev. 418, where a form of certificate is given and the cases are collected by Charles H. Burr, Jr., who finds a definite formulation of conclusions to be impossible.

VOUCH. To call to warranty; to call upon a person who has warranted a title, to defend the title which he so warranted. 2 Bl. Com. 358.

VOUCHER. In common recoveries, the person who is called to warrant or defend the title is called the voucher. 2 Bouvier, Inst. n. 2093.

VOUCHER. In Accounts. An account-book in which are entered the acquittances or warrants for the accountant's discharge. Any acquittance or receipt which is evidence of payment or of the debtor's being discharged. See 8 Halst. 299; 8 N. J. L. 299; 1 Metc. Mass. 218. A merchant's books are the vouchers of the correctness of his accounts and a receipt is voucher of payment, but neither is conclusive. 12 Abb. Pro. 202.

When used in connection with the disbursement of money, voucher means a written or printed instrument in the nature of a bill of particulars, account, etc., which shows on what account and by what authority a particular payment has been made. 54 N. W. Rep. (Neb.) 886; 107 Ill. 495.

In Old Conveyancing. The person on whom the tenant to the precipe calls to defend the title to the land, because he is supposed to have warranted the title to him at the time of the original purchase.

The person usually employed for this purpose is the crier of the court, who is therefore called the common voucher. See Cruise, Dig. tit. 36, c. 3, s. 1; 22 Vinet, Abr. 26; RECOVERY.

VOUCHER TO WARRANTY. The calling one who has warranted lands, by the party warranted, to come and defend the suit for him. Co. Litt. 101 b.

VOYAGE. In Maritime Law. The passage of a ship upon the seas from one port to another, or to several ports. The term includes the enterprise entered upon and not merely the route. 113 Mass. 826. Where a loss was occasioned whilst loading the cargo, it was held to be during the voyage; L. R. 15 P. D. 203.

Every voyage must have a terminus a quo and a terminus ad quem. When the insurance is for a limited time, the two extremes of that time are the termini of the voyage insured. When a ship is insured both outward and homeward, for one entire premium, this, with reference to the insurance, is considered but one voyage, and the terminus a quo is also the terminus ad quem; Marsh. Ins. b. 1, c. 7, s. 1-5. As to the commencement and ending of the voyage, see RISK.

The voyage, with reference to the legality of it, is sometimes confounded with the traffic in which the ship is engaged, and is frequently said to be illegal only because the trade is so; but a voyage may be lawful, and yet the transport of certain goods on board the ship may be prohibited; or the voyage may be illegal, though the transport of the goods be lawful; Marsh. Ins. b. 1, c. 6, s. 1. See DEVIATION.

In the French Law, the voyage de conserve is the name given to designate an agreement made between two or more sea-captains that they will not separate in their voyage, will lend aid to each other, and will defend themselves against a common enemy or the enemy of one of them in case of attack. This agreement is said to be a partnership. 3 Pardessus, Dr. Com. n. 636; 4 id. 984; 20 Toullier, n. 17.

VULGARIS OPINIO (Lat.). Common opinion.

VULGO CONCEPTI (Lat.). In Civil Law. Bastards whose father was unknown. Leg. 53, ff. de statu hominum. Those, also, whose fathers, though known, could not lawfully be recognized as such: viz., the offspring of incest and adultery. Code Civ. 8. 7. 1.

WADSET. In Scotch Law. The old term for a mortgage. A right by which lands or other heritable subjects are impignored by the proprietor to his creditor in security of his debt. Like other heritable rights, it is protected by seisin.

Wadsets are commonly made out in the form of mutual contracts, in which one party sells the land and the other grants the right of reversion. Erskine, Inst. 2. 8. 1. 2.

Wadsets are proper, where the use of the land shall go for the use of the money; improper, where the reversor agrees to make up the deficiency; and where it amounts to more, the surplus profit of the land is applied to the extinction of the principal. Erskine, Inst. 2. 8. 12. 13.

WAGE. To give a pledge or security for the performance of anything; as, to wage or gage deliverance, to wage law, etc. Co. Litt. 284. This word is but little used. See MINIMUM WAGE.

WAGE EARNER. As used in a bankruptcy act: An individual who works for wages, salary, or hire, at a rate of compensation not exceeding one thousand five hundred dollars per year. 29 Am. & Eng. Encyc. 2nd ed., 1082; 114 Fed. Rep. 232.

WAGER. A bet; a contract by which two parties or more agree that a certain sum of money, or other thing, shall be paid or delivered to one of them on the happening or not happening of an uncertain event. See 85 Tenn. 572; 75 Ill. 360.

A contract upon a contingency by which one may lose but cannot gain, or the other can gain but cannot lose, is a wager; 15 Gratt. 653; but there must be a risk by both parties; 5 Humph. 561. In 1 Bosw. 207, it was said: "A wager is something hazarded on the issue of some uncertain event; a bet is a wager, though a wager is not necessarily a bet."

At common law, wagers were not, per se, void; 2 Term 610; 37 Cal. 670; 3 McLean 100; 25 Tex. 586. By an English statute passed in 1845, wagers were prohibited, and similar statutes have been passed in many of the states. See Dos Passos, St. Br. 409; MARGINS.

Where a contract is a mere device to avoid the statute, it is illegal, but the burden of proving its illegality is upon the defendant; 70 N. Y. 202; and the intention of the parties is for the jury; 20 E. L. & E. 290; 72 Pa. 155. See 48 Ill. App. 39; 89 Pa. 250.

The principle which determines whether the sale of stocks is a wagering contract, is that a bona fide contract to buy and sell will be sustained, but where there is no actual sale and the transaction is to be settled by the payment of differences it will be set aside; 79 Ill. 328; Dos Passos, St. Br. 410; even where the principals may not be able to enforce the contract and the broker through whom the transaction is made is ignorant of their intention, he may recover for money paid out in commissions; id. 410; contra, 119 Mo. 126; the same principle applies to contracts for the sale and delivery of grain; 52 Wis. 593; and indeed to any contract for the sale or purchase of any personal property to be delivered at a future date, which is intended by both parties as a wager on the rise and fall of prices and to be settled by payment of differences; 85 Tenn. 572, 581; 38 Fed. Rep. 633; 40 Ohio St. 951; 85 Ky. 230; 131 U. S. 336; 38 Mo. App. 883; see 82 Fed. Rep. 633; but an agreement to sell grain for future delivery is not necessarily a gambling transaction; 87 Neb. 786.

A purchase, with an option to the seller to deliver on a certain day, is not a wager; 79 Ill. 351; 47 Minn. 228; and the usage allowing merchants to settle such contracts by "differences" does not necessarily render such contracts void; Gresham, J., in 12 Chic. L. N. 241. See 41 Fed. Rep. 174. Margins advanced to brokers on contracts made to be settled on differences may be recovered; 43 Ill. App. 439. Contracts of sales for future delivery are subject to the same principle; they are valid if there is a bona fide intention to deliver, even if the seller is not the owner of the property sold, at the time of the contract; 74 Ia. 468; 34 Mo. App. 302; otherwise they are void; 11 Fed. Rep. 193; 54 Mo. App. 606; 47 Minn. 228; see 77 Md. 504; 36 Ill. App. 179; but where purchases and sales are actually completed by delivery to the holder, who obtained the money to pay advances by hypothecating the stock, the transactions are valid; [1895] A. C. 818. See a note in 83 Am. L. Reg. N. s. 436. A case varying from the general rule that where accounts are to be settled by differences, the transaction is a gambling one, confines it to cases where neither party expects any delivery at any time and holds the transaction valid if the final balance is to be by delivery, though intermediate balances were otherwise settled; 88 Me. 230. The law looks at the intention of the parties, which is a fact for the jury, and oral evidence may be given of the circumstances, without respect to the form of the transaction; 47 Fed. Rep. 574; but a transaction which on its face is legitimate cannot be held void as a wagering contract by showing that one party only so understood and meant it to be. The proof must go further and show that this understanding was mutual; 149 U. S. 481. See Dos Passos, St. Br. 477. See also OPTION; FUTURES; MARGIN.

It has been held that contracts between the purchaser of futures and a broker, made without the state, though valid where made, could not be enforced in the state where it was invalid by statute; 71 Miss. 514; the same principle applies to notes given in settlement of gambling transactions; 155 Ill. 617. Where a note which was delivered to a broker to secure him against loss in stock transactions was transferred to an innocent purchaser without notice, equity would not compel its return, because given for a gambling debt; 173 Pa. 525; and a mortgage securing advances for margins on a contract for future delivery was held valid where the advances were made in good faith to save loss; 33 Fed. Rep. 833; but the original payee cannot recover on a note, for money advanced upon or in execution of a contract of wager, to which he is a party or direct participant in the name of or on behalf of the parties; 131 U. S. 336. See 25 App. Div. N. Y. 228.

The English statute prohibiting the recovery of money, etc., deposited to abide the event of a wager, applies only to a deposit as the stake to abide the event of a wager and not to deposits as security for the observance by the loser, of the terms of the wagering contract, and the authority to return the latter may be revoked and the securities recovered at any time before their appropriation; [1891] 2 Q. B. 329.

If all options were prohibited, all conditional contracts would have to be prohibited. See Dr. Wharton's note to 11 Fed. Rep. 193; also 70 N. Y. 202.

When one loses a wager and gets another to pay the money for him, an action lies for the recovery of the money; 15 C. B. N. s. 316; but see 97 Pa. 202, 208. So it is said that where an agent advances money to his principal to pay losses incurred in an illegal transaction, the contract between them, made after the illegal contract is closed, is binding; 2 Woods 354. See 98 Mass. 161. Where a broker sued his principal for advances and commissions on the purchase of property, it was held that the fact that persons from whom the broker bought the property for his principal had not the goods on hand when the contract was made, and that they had no reasonable expectation of acquiring them except by purchase, did not defeat the broker's right to recover; 14 Bush 727. See, also, 5 M. & W. 462.

See Biddle, Stock Brokers; Lewis, Stocks; article by Dr. Wharton in 3 C. L. Mag. 1, on Political Economy and Criminal Law.

Wagers on the event of an election laid before the poll is open; 1 Term 56; 4 Johns. 426; 4 H. & McH. 284; or after it is closed; 8 Johns. 147, 434; are unlawful. See McCreary, Elect. § 149. And wagers are against public policy if they are in restraint of marriage; 10 East 22; if made as to the mode of playing an illegal game; 2 H. Bla. 43; 1 N. & M'C. 180; or on an abstract speculative question of law or judicial practice, not arising out of circumstances in which the parties have a real interest; 12 East 247. But see 1 Cowp. 37.

Wagers, though on indifferent subjects, are inconsistent with good morals, and as such, are void, as against public policy; 23 Or. 419.

Wagers as to the sex of an individual; Cowp. 729; or whether an unmarried woman had borne or would have a child; 4 Camp. 152; are illegal, as necessarily leading to painful and indecent considerations. Every bet about the age, or height, or weight, or wealth, or circumstances, or situation of any person, is illegal; and this, whether the subject of the bet be man, woman, or child, married or single, native or foreigner, in this country or abroad; 1 Rawle 42. And it seems that a wager between two coach-proprietors, whether or not a particular person would go by one of their coaches, is illegal, as exposing that person to inconvenience; 1 B. & Ald. 683.

In the case even of a legal wager, the authority of a stakeholder, like that of an arbitrator, may be rescinded by either party before the event happens. And if, after his authority has been countermanded and the stake has been demanded, he refuse to deliver it, trover or assumpsit for money had and received is maintainable; 1 B. & Ald. 683. And where the wager is in its nature illegal, the stake may be recovered, even after the event, on demand made before it has been paid over; 4 Taunt. 474. But see 12 Johns. 1; 29 Neb. 812; 9 Colo. 212. Where the stakeholder of a wager void as between the parties is notified by one of them not to pay over the money to his adversary, even after the result of the event has become known, but before payment has been made, he cannot defeat an action by such party for its recovery; 5 Tex. Civ. App. 293; 48 Mo. App. 319. See STAKEHOLDER; MARGIN; HORSE RACE; BET; HAZARD.

WAGER OF BATTLE. A superstitious mode of trial, at one time common throughout Christendom, introduced into England by William the Conqueror.

It was resorted to in three cases only: in the court martial or court of chivalry; in appeals of felony and upon approvals; and upon issue joined in a writ of right. Co. Litt. § 204. On appeals parties fought in their own proper persons, on a writ of right by their champions. But if the appellant or approver were a woman, a priest, an infant, or of the age of sixty, or lame or blind, or a peer of the realm, or a citizen of London; or if the crime were notorious; in such cases wager of battle might be declined by the appellant or approver. But where the wager of battle was allowed, the appellee pleaded not guilty, and threw down his glove, declaring that he would defend the same with his body. The appellant took up the glove, replying that he was ready to make good his appeal, body for body. Thereupon the appellee, taking the Bible in his right hand, and in his left the right hand of his antagonist, swore to this effect: "Hear this, O man, whom I hold by the hand, who callest thyself John by the name of baptism, that I, who call myself Thomas by the name of baptism, did not feloniously murder thy father, William by name, nor am anywise guilty of the said felony; so help me God and the saints; and this I will defend against thee by my body, as this court shall award." The appellant replied with a like oath, declaring also that the appellee had perjured himself. They followed oaths by both parties against amulets and sorcery as follows: "Hear this, ye justices, that I have this day neither eat, drank, nor have upon me neither bones, stones, nor grass, nor any enchantment, sorcery, or witchcraft, whereby the law of God may be abused, or the law of the devil strengthened, or the souls of men perished." The battle was then begun; and if the appellee were so far vanquished as not to be able or willing to fight any longer, he was adjudged to be hanged immediately; but if he killed the appellant, or could maintain the fight from sunrise till the stars appeared in the evening, he was acquitted. Also if the appellant became recreant, and pronounced the word craven, he lost his liberum legem, and became infamous (see Craven), and the appellee recovered his damages, and was forever quit of any further proceedings for the same offence. The proceedings in wager of battle in a writ of right were similar to those in appeals of felony, the battle was by champions. It was the only mode of determining a writ of right until Henry II. introduced the grand assize, q. v. The prevalence of judicial combats in the Middle Ages is attributed by Mr. Hallam to systematic perjury in witnesses, and want of legal discrimination on the parts of judges. Mor. & W. It was not abolished in England till the enactment of stat. 59 Geo. III. c. 46. See 1 B. & Ald. 405; 3 Bla. Com. 339; 4 id. 347; APPEAL. This mode of trial was not peculiar in England. The emperor Otho, 963, held a diet at Verona, at which several sovereigns and great lords of Italy, Germany, and France were present. In order to put a stop to the frequent perjuries in judicial trials, this diet was instituted in all cases, even in those which followed the course of the Roman law, proof by combat for proof by oath. Henric de Pansey, Auth. Judic. Introduct. c. 3. And for a detailed account of this mode of trial see Herbert, Inns of Court 119. The last case in which the right was asserted was London v. Thornton, 1 B. & Ald. 405, where Lord Ellenborough declared that it was part of the general law of the realm and must be enforced, no matter how much disapproved. See Wills, Circ. Ev. 290, for a detailed statement of the facts. At the next session of the British parliament an act was passed to abolish appeals of felony, or of felony, or of other offences, and wager of battle, or joining issue or trial by battle, in writs of right. 55 Geo. III. c. 46. In the Statutes of South Carolina, Edition of 1857, it is said to be in existence in that state. For the history of this species of trial, see 3 Bla. Com. 337; 4 id. 347; Encyclopædia, Suppl. de Beaulieu; Steph. Pl. 124, and App. note 35. The Law's Lumber Room, by Francis Watt.

WAGER OF LAW. In Old Practice. An oath taken by a defendant in an action of debt that he does not owe the claim, supported by the oaths of eleven neighbors.

When an action of debt is brought against a man upon a simple contract, and the defendant pleads nil debet, and concedes his plea with this plea, with this formula, "And this he is ready to defend against him the said A. B. and his suit, as the court of our lord the king here shall consider," etc., he is then put in sureties (vadios) to wage his law on a day appointed by the judge. The wager of law consists in an oath taken by the defendant on the appointed day, and confirmed by the oaths of eleven neighbors or compurgators. This oath had the effect of a verdict in favor of the defendant, and was only allowed in the actions of debt on simple contract, and detinue; nor was it allowed to any one not of good character, or to one who had this privilege of the defendant, assumpsit displaces debt as a form of action on simple contracts, and instead of detinue, trover was used. But in England wager of law was abolished by 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 48, § 13. And even before its abolition it had fallen into disuse as a method of defence in 2 B. & C. 538, where the defendant offered to wage his law, but the plaintiff abandoned the case. This was in 1824. If it ever had any existence in the United States, it is now completely abolished; 8 Whed. 134.

The name (in law Latin, vadiatio legis) comes from the defendant's being put in pledges (vadios) to make his oath on the appointed day. There was a similar oath in the Roman law, and in the laws of most of the nations that conquered Rome. It was very early in law taken by the defendant distinctly describes it. Glanville, lib. 1, c. 9, 19. See Steph. Pl. 124, 250; Co. 2d Inst. 119; 3 Chitty, Pl. 497; 18 Vinet, Abr. 58; Bac. Abr. For the origin of this form of trial, see Steph. Plead. notes xxxix.; Co. Litt. 294, 305; 2 Bla. Com. 341.

See OATH DECORUM.

WAGER POLICY. One made when the insured has no insurable interest. See INSURABLE INTEREST; POLICY.

WAGES. A compensation given to a hired person for his or her services. See MASTER AND SERVANT; SEAMEN; STORE ORDEES.

WAGON. A common vehicle for the transportation of goods, wares, and merchandise of all descriptions. The term does not include a hackney coach; 5 Cal. 418; but a "buggy" is a wagon; 7 Kan. 325; contra, 27 Mo. 507; as is a hearse, within the meaning of an exemption law; 65 Wis. 481.

The phrase, "hailed by wagon," does not mean transportation by rail or steamboat. 6 S. W. 337.

WAIFS. Stolen goods waived or scattered by a thief in his flight in order to effect his escape.

Such goods, by the English common law, belong to the king; 1 Bla. Com. 296; 5 Co. 109; Cro. Eliz. 694. This prerogative has never been adopted here against the true owner, and never put in practice against the finder, though against him there would be better reason for adopting it; 2 Kent 292.

WAINAGIUM (Sax. woeg, Lat. agina). That which is necessary to the farmer for the cultivation of his land. Barrington, Stat. 12; Magna Charta, c. 14. According to Selden and Lord Bacon, it is not the same as contentementum, used in the same chapter of Magna Charta, meaning the power of entertaining guests or, countenance, as common people say.

WAITING CLERKS IN CHANCERY. It was the duty of these officers to wait in attendance on the court of chancery. The office was abolished in 1842.

WAIVE. A term applied to a woman as outlaw is applied to a man. A man is an outlaw; a woman is a waive. Crabb, Tech. Dict.

To abandon or forsake a right. To abandon without right: as, "if the felon waives, that is, leaves any goods in his flight from those who either pursue him, or are apprehended by him so to do,—he forfeits them, whether they be his own goods, or goods stolen by him." Bac. Abr. Forfeiture (B).

WAIVER. The relinquishment or refusal to accept of a right. Cited 4 Misc. Rep. 58.

The intentional relinquishment of a known right with both knowledge of its existence and an intention to relinquish it. 82 Pac. Rep. (Or.) 689. See 83 Conn. 40; 148 Mass. 374; 76 Va. 814; 105 U. S. 859.

In practice, it is required of every one to take advantage of his rights at a proper time; and neglecting to do so will be considered as a waiver. If, for example, a defendant who has been misnamed in the writ and declaration pleads over, he cannot afterwards take advantage of the error by pleading in abatement; for his plea amounts to a waiver. Failure of counsel, either in brief or oral argument, to allude to an assignment of error, is a waiver thereof; 72 Fed. Rep. 508.

In seeking for a remedy, the party injured may, in some instances, waive a part of his right and sue for another: for example, when the defendant has committed a trespass on the property of the plaintiff by taking it away, and afterwards he sells it, the injured party may waive the trespass and bring an action of assumpsit for the recovery of the money thus received by the defendant; 1 Chitty, Pl. 90. A delay of two years in bringing an action in rem on a maritime lien, the vessel meantime having passed into other hands, is a waiver of the lien; 84 Fed. Rep. 880; but when objections are seasonably and appropriately made there can be no waiver; 116 Ind. 578; and mere indulgence or silent acquiescence in the failure to perform is never construed into a waiver, unless some element of estoppel can be invoked; id.

In contracts, if, after knowledge of a supposed fraud, surprise, or mistake, a party performs the agreement in part, he will be considered as having waived the objection; 1 Bro. P. C. 239.

When a constitutional provision is designed for the protection solely of the property rights of the citizen, it is competent for him to waive the protection, and to consent to such action as would be invalid if taken against his will; Cooley, Const. Lim. 219. See 3 N. Y. 511; 6 Hill 147. In criminal cases this doctrine must be true only to a very limited extent; Cooley, Const. Lim. 230. See JURY.

As to what will amount to a waiver of a forfeiture, see 1 Conn. 79; 7 id. 45; 1 Johns. Cas. 125; 14 Wend. 419; 8 Pick. 202; 2 N. H. 120, 163; 1 Ohio 21; CONDITION.

WAKENING. In Scotch Law. The revival of an action.

An action is said to sleep when it lies over, not insisted on for a year, in which case it is suspended. Erskine, Inst. 4. 1. 33. With us a revival is by scire facias.

WAND OF PEACE. In Scotch Law. The wand which the messenger carries along with his blazon, in executing a caption, and with which he touches the prisoner. A sliding along this staff of a movable ring, or the breaking of the staff, is a protest that the officer has been resisted or deforced. Bell, Dict. Imprisonment.

WANT. "Want," used in a will, is synonymous with "wish." It is as imperative as the word "desire." 5 Ky. Opin. 314.

WANTED. In a statute for condemning land, "wanted" for the construction of a railroad, does not mean desired, but is synonymous with necessary. 80 Ky. 267. The term is frequently used to mean need or require. 34 Conn. 403.

WANTON AND FURIOUS DRIVING. An offence against public health, which under the stat. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 56, is punishable as a misdemeanor by fine or imprisonment. In this country the offence is usually provided for by state, county, or municipal legislation.

WANTON NEGLECT. See WILFUL NEGLECT.

WANTON NEGLIGENCE. The failure of one charged with a duty to exercise an honest effort in the employment of all available means to prevent injury. 21 Am. & Eng. Encyc. 478; 124 Ala. 372.

WANTONLY. Done in a licentious spirit, perversely, recklessly, without regard to propriety or the rights of others; careless of consequences, and yet without settled malice. 98 N. C. 641; 97 id. 465; 35 Fed. Rep. 282.

See CARELESSLY and WANTONLY.

WANTONLY AND MALICIOUSLY. The words "wantonly and maliciously" mean an evil and unlawful purpose, as distinguished from that of promoting the law, when used in a prosecution for assault in making an arrest. 156 Ky. 212, 160 S. W. 928.

WANTONNESS. A licentious act by one man towards the person of another, without regard to his rights: as, for example, if a man should attempt to pull off another's hat against his will, in order to expose him to ridicule, the offence would be an assault, and if he touched him it would amount to a battery. See 24 N. C. 688. See CARELESSLY and WANTONLY.

WAPENTAKE (from Sax. wapen, i. e. armatura, and fac, i. e. tactus). A Saxon court held monthly by the alderman for the benefit of the hundred.

It was called a wapentake from wapen, arms, and fac, to touch; because when the chief of the hundred entered upon his office he appeared in the field on a certain day, on horseback, with a pike in his hand, and all the principal men met him with lances. Upon this he alighted, and they all touched his pike with their lances, in token of their submission to his authority. In this court causes of great moment were heard and determined, as Mr. Dugdale has shown from several records. Besides which it took cognizance of theft, trial by ordeal, view of frankpledge, and the like; whence after the conquest it was called the sheriff's tourn, and, as regarded the examination of the pledges, the court of the view of frankpledge. These pledges were no other than the freedom within the liberty, who, according to an institution of King Alfred, were mutually pledged for the good behavior of each other. Fortescue, de Laud. c. 24; Dugdale, Orig. Jur. 37; 4 Bl. Com. 278. Sir Thomas Smith derives it from the custom of taking away the arms at the muster of each hundred, from those who could not find sureties for good behavior. Rep. Angl. lib. 2, c. 15.

WAR. An armed contest between nations. Grotius, de Jur. Bell. l. 1, c. 1. The state of nations among whom there is an interruption of all pacific relations, and a general contention by force, authorized by the sovereign. *Mann, Comm. 98; 1 Kent *61, n. (h.).*

An armed contest to maintain the rights of a nation or to bring about a settlement of its disputes with other nations. It is also defined as a hostile contest with armies between two or more states claiming sufficient rights. Snow, Lect. Int. L. 82.

A civil war is one confined to a single nation. It is public on the part of the established government, and private on the part of the people resisting its authority, but both the parties are entitled to all the rights of war as against each other, and even as respects neutral nations; Wheat. Int. L. § 296.

The right of making war belongs in every civilized nation to the supreme power of the state. The exercise of this right is regulated by the fundamental laws in each country, and may be delegated to its inferior authorities in remote possessions, or even to a commercial corporation. A contest by force between independent sovereign states is called a public war. If it is declared in form, or duly commenced, it entitles both the belligerent parties to all the rights of war against each other. A formal declaration of war to the enemy was once considered necessary to legalize hostilities between nations. The Romans declared war with religious ceremony; and an invasion without a declaration was unlawful; *1 Kent *53.* The present usage is to publish a manifesto within the territory of the state declaring war, announcing the existence of hostilities and the motives for commencing them, usually to warn neutral states; Snow, Lect. Int. L. 82. A civil war is never declared; Boyd's Wheat. Int. L. § 294. It dates from the time the insurgents are declared belligerents; Snow, Lect. Int. L. 82. Even where there is a formal declaration of war, there is said to be strong tendency to date the war from the first act of hostility; id. That the recent tendency is to consider a declaration of war desirable and necessary, see 28 Am. L. Rev. 754. Since the time of Bynkershoek it has been the settled practice in Europe that war may lawfully exist by a declaration which is unilateral, or without a declaration on either side; it may begin by mutual hostilities; 1 Kent 54; at least as to subjects of a belligerent state; L. R. 3 Adm. & Ecc. 890; but some publicists should be done to announce to the people a state of war, and to apprise neutrals of its existence; 1 Halleck, Int. Law, Baker's ed. 542. A state of war may exist without any formal declaration of it by either party, and this is true of both civil and foreign war; 2 Black 635. A state of civil war exists whenever the regular course of justice is interrupted by insurrection; id.

The war between Great Britain and the United States was a civil war until the declaration of independence, when it became a public war between independent governments; 3 Dall. 199, 224. So the late war of secession in this country was a civil war after the president's proclamation of August 16, 1861. See 37 Ga. 482; 23 Am. L. Reg. 129; SECESSION. The general doctrines applicable to the subjects of belligerent natives have been held to be applicable to the hostile parties in that war; 2 Black 685. In a civil war the sovereign has belligerent as well as sovereign rights against his rebel subjects, and may exercise either at his discretion; 2 Wall. 419; 100 Mass. 576.

The constitution of the United States (art. 1, sec. 8) provides that congress shall have power to declare war. See 3 Wall. 404; 11 id. 268, 831. An act of congress is necessary to the commencement of a foreign war and is in itself a declaration; 1 Kent 55. It fixes the date of the war; Thayer, Const. Cas. 2353. After congress has acted, it is not necessary to communicate the action to the enemy; 1 Kent 55; but an Indian war may exist without act of congress; 28 Ct. of Cl. 147. Actual hostilities may determine the date of the commencement of a war; a formal proclamation is unnecessary; 87 Fed. Rep. 927.

Belligerent states not infrequently adopt the rule of reciprocity in the conduct of war, but this usage has not yet assumed the character of a positive law. Frequently an opposing belligerent applies the rule of reciprocity and metes out to his adversary the same measure of justice that he receives from him. But it is said that where one belligerent exceeds his extreme rights and becomes barbarous and cruel in his conduct, the other should not, as a general thing, follow and retort upon its subjects by treating them in like manner; 2 Halleck, Int. Law 35.

Under the regulations of the United States, the army is not allowed to use the enemy's flag or uniform for purposes of deceit, but the navy may use a foreign flag to deceive the enemy if it is hauled down before a gun is fired; Snow, Lect. Int. Law 82. See WEAPONS; FLAG.

When war exists between two nations, every individual of the one is at war with every individual of the other; though it is said that modern international law has attempted, with some success, to confine the contest to the armies of the contending powers and relieve non-combatants from loss and suffering as much as possible; Snow, Lect. Int. Law 82.

War gives this government full right to take the persons and confiscate the property of the enemy wherever found in the United States, and while the humane policy of modern times may have mitigated this rigid rule, it cannot impair the right itself; 8 Cra. 110. The right to take enemy's property found in the United States requires an act of congress; id., Story, J. diss. This rule applies to the property of a neutral within the enemy's lines; 97 U. S. 60; but it was held in 3 Wall. 419, that the right to take the property of an enemy on land is substantially restricted "to special cases dictated by the necessary operations of the war;" "the seizure of private property of pacific persons for the sake of gain is excluded." See 143 U. S. 356.

A belligerent may, by express law or edict, confiscate the property or even the land of an alien enemy, within its territory or occupation; 6 Wall. 759; 100 Mass. 574.

The right of a belligerent to confiscate debts due by its subjects to enemy's subjects is usually recognized, but seldom exercised; *1 Kent *62; and this is more especially true in relation to the public debt of a belligerent state to an enemy's subject; 1 Halleck, Int. L. 535.* The seizure by the United States of enemy's property on land cannot be authorized by the law of nations; it can be upheld only by an act of congress; 5 Blatch. 231. Vessels and cargo belonging to trading concerns in the enemy's country, or corporations organized under its laws, are subject to capture, regardless of the domicile of the partners or stockholders; 87 Fed. Rep. 927.

A belligerent has a right to seize and retain as prisoners of war all subjects of an enemy state found within its territory; but this right has usually been modified by treaty, usage, or municipal regulations, and is seldom enforced; 1 Halleck, Int. L., Baker's ed. 530.

Territory conquered during a war is part of the domain of the conqueror for all commercial and belligerent purposes, so long as he continues in possession; 9 Cra. 191; but it is not incorporated into the domain of the conqueror except by a treaty of peace under which the former owner renounces it, or by long possession; 2 Gall. 485.

It is a general practice to permit alien residents to remain in the country during a war and to protect their property from seizure, or, if they return to their own state, to allow them to take it with them. Even property of the enemy found afloat in ports at the breaking out of the war is usually allowed safe conduct to a home port with time to finish loading cargo. The president's proclamation of April 28, 1898, fixed April 21 as the beginning of the Spanish war, and gave Spanish merchant vessels found in United States ports till May 21, inclusive, to load and depart with safe conduct to their destination, except vessels carrying military or naval officers, or coal in excess of their own needs, or contraband, or despatches; and permitted any such vessels which, prior to April 21, had sailed from any foreign port to any United States port, to reach their destination, unload, and return to any port not blockaded.

Congress declared on April 25, 1898, that a state of war had existed from and after April 21, 1898, and this fixed the latter date as the beginning of that war; 87 Fed. Rep. 925.

War suspends all commercial intercourse between the citizens of belligerent states, except so far as may be allowed by the sovereign authority. The only exceptions are contracts for ransom and other matters of absolute necessity and the payment of debts to an agent of an alien enemy where such agent resides in the same state with the debtor; but even such payments to an agent of an alien enemy must not be done with a view of transmitting the funds to the principal during the continuance of war; 95 U. S. 429.

The doctrine of the renewal of contracts suspended by a war is based on considerations of equity and justice and cannot be invoked to revive a contract which it would be inequitable to revive, as where time is of the essence of the contract or the parties cannot be made equal; 93 U. S. 24. In a learned opinion by Gray, J., in 100 Mass. 57 (quoted with approval in 95 U. S. 429, and 169 U. S. 721), it was said:—

"The result is, that the law of nations, as judicially declared, prohibits all intercourse between citizens of the two belligerents which is inconsistent with the state of war between their countries, and that this includes any act of voluntary submission to the enemy, or receiving his protection; as well as any act or contract which tends to increase his resources; and every kind of trading or commercial dealing or intercourse, whether by transmission of money or goods, or orders for the delivery of either, between the two countries, directly or indirectly, or through the intervention of third persons or partnerships, or by contracts in any form looking to or involving such transmission, or by insurances upon trade with or by the enemy. Beyond the principle of these cases the prohibition has not been carried by judicial decision. The more sweeping statements in the text-books are taken from the dicta which we have already examined, and in none of them is any other example given than those just mentioned. At this age of the world, when all the tendencies of the law of nations are to exempt individuals and private contracts from injury or restraint in consequence of war between their governments, we are not disposed to declare such contracts unlawful as have not been heretofore adjudged to be inconsistent with a state of war."

The trading or transmission of property or money which is prohibited by international law during war, is from or to one of the countries at war. An alien enemy residing in this country may contract and sue as a citizen can; 100 Mass. 576. Where a creditor, though the subject of the enemy, remains in the country of the debtor, or has an agent there, payment to the creditor or his agent is not a violation of the duties imposed by a state of war upon the debtor; id.

The breaking out of a war does not necessarily and as a matter of law revoke every agency; it depends upon the circumstances and the nature of the agency; 169 U. S. 73. A contract of agency of an insurance company is revoked; 95 id. 425, citing 93 id. 24. In order to the subsistence of an agency during the war, it must have the assent of the parties; 95 id. 429. Contracts between parties within the Confederacy made during the civil war were valid; 143 id. 346.

War suspends the capacity of an alien enemy to sue in our courts; 7 Cra. 603; 2 Paine 639. But see 4 Am. L. T. 68. An assignee of an alien enemy cannot sustain a claim in a prize court; 1 Gall. 563; but an alien enemy may come into admiralty and defend his property seized as prize on the high seas; 5 Blatch. 231. The right to proceed in an action begun before the war is only suspended; Woolw. 102. Neither interest nor the statute of limitations run during a war.

As to the effect of war on life insurance contracts, the authorities vary; that the failure to pay premiums avoids the policy, see 93 U. S. 24; 95 id. 425; that the contract is not annulled by war, but only suspended, see 7 Bush 179; 37 N. J. L. 444; 20 Gratt. 614; 9 Blatch. 234; 45 Miss. 581. In most of the latter cases either the insured had made a tender of the premiums or the company's agent had removed during the war; 1 Biddle, Ins. § 489. There seems to be authority that a fire insurance policy is not annulled by war; see 9 Heisk. 399; as to a marine policy, see 50 N. Y. 619. And see, generally, 23 Am. L. Reg. 129; 25 id. 651; 11 Am. L. Rev. 221; 1 Biddle, Ins. § 489.

No civil liability attached to officers or soldiers for an act done in accordance with the usages of civilized warfare, in the late rebellion under and by military authority of either party; 131 U. S. 405. The legal condition of a Confederate soldier was that of a soldier serving against the United States under a hostile power. His legal condition subsequent to May, 1865, was that of a prisoner of war upon parole; 23 Ct. Cls. 326.

The following has recently been adjudicated in cases arising out of the Spanish-American war:

Vessels of war have the right, in the absence of any declaration of exemption by the political power, to capture enemy's property wherever found afloat, and the burden is on the claimant to show that it comes within the exemption of any such proclamation; 87 Fed. Rep. 927.

Cargo shipped from this country in an enemy's vessel to residents of a neutral country is presumably neutral cargo; but if so shipped to the enemy's country it is presumptively enemy's property, but the latter presumption may be overcome; id.

WAR CLAIMS. As to federal legislation on this subject, see 183 U. S. 244. The act of 1875, Feb. 18, provided that the court of claims should have no jurisdiction over claims growing out of the destruction of property during the civil war; and the act of March 3, 1887, excludes such claims from the jurisdiction of the said court and of the district and circuit courts. Decisions under the act of 1884 will be found in 163 U. S. 253, which holds that the court of claims has no jurisdiction over a claim for railroad iron appropriated by the army "while suppressing the rebellion." The United States is not responsible for the destruction of private property by their military operations during the civil war, committed by either army; nor, where they rebuild the property

(a railroad bridge), can it recover from the owner for the cost; 120 U. S. 227. See UNITED STATES COURTS.

WAR OFFICE. In England. A department of state from which the sovereign issues orders to his forces. Whart. Lex.

WARD. An infant placed by authority of law under the care of a guardian.

While under the care of a guardian, a ward can make no contract whatever binding upon him, except for necessities. When the relation of guardian and ward ceases, the latter is entitled to have an account of the administration of his estate from the former. During the existence of this relation the ward is under the subjection of his guardian, who stands in loco parentis. See GUARDIAN.

The English Judicature Act of 1873 assigns the wardship of infants and the care of infants' estates to the chancery division of the high court of justice. Whart. Lex.

A subdivision of a city to watch in the daytime, for the purpose of preventing violations of the law. It is the duty of all police officers and constables to keep ward in their respective districts. It now indicates a subdivision of a city.

WARD IN CHANCERY. An infant who is under the superintendence of the chancellor. See WARD; COURT OF CHANCERY.

WARD-HOLDING. In Old Scotch Law. Military tenure by which lands were held. It was so called from the yearly tax in commutation of the right to hold vassals' lands during minority. It was abolished in 1747. Bell, Dict.

WARDEN. A guardian; a keeper. This is the name given to various officers: as, the warden of the prison, the wardens of the port of Philadelphia, church-wardens. As to the latter, see Baum, Church Law.

WARDEN OF THE CINQUE PORTS. See CINQUE PORTS.

WARDMOTE (from ward, and Sax. mote, or gemote, a meeting).

In English Law. A court held in every ward in London, with power to inquire into and present all defaults concerning the watch and police doing their duty, that engines, etc., are provided against fire, that persons selling ale and beer be honest and suffer no disorders, nor permit gaming, etc., that they sell in lawful measures, and searches are to be made for beggars, vagrants, and idle persons, etc., who shall be punished. Chart. Hen. II.; Cunningham; Wharton.

WARDSHIP. In English Law. The right of the lord over the person and estate of the tenant, when the latter was under a certain age.

Wardship was incident to a tenure by knight's service (see FEUDAL LAW), and to a tenure in socage; by the latter the nearest relation to whom the inheritance could not descend was entitled to the custody of the person and estate of the heir till he attained the age of fourteen years; at which period the wardship ceased, and the guardian was bound to account. Wardship in copyhold estates partook of that in chivalry and that in socage. Like the former, the lord was the guardian; like the latter, he was required to account. 2 Bla. Com. 67, 87, 97; Glanville, lib. 7, c. 9; Grand Cout. c. 83; Reg. Maj. c. 42.

WARDS AND LIVERIES, COURT OF. An English court erected by Hen. III. and abolished by 12 Car. II. c. 24.

WAREHOUSE. A place adapted to the reception and storage of goods and merchandise. 23 Me. 47.

A radical change was made in the revenue laws of the United States by the establishment, under the act of congress of Aug. 6, 1846, of the warehousing system. This statute is commonly called the Warehousing Act. Its evident object is to facilitate and encourage commerce by exempting the importer from the payment of duties until he is ready to bring his goods into market; 13 How. 295. Previous to the passage of that act, no goods chargeable with cash duties could be landed at the port of delivery until the duties were paid at the port of entry. The importer had no right to land them anywhere until they had passed through the custom-house. Before that act, the only provisions existing in relation to the warehousing of goods were merely applicable to special cases, such as where the vessel in which the goods were imported was subject to quarantine regulations, or where the entry might have been incomplete, or the goods had received damage, or where a landing was compelled at a port other than the one to which the vessel was destined, on account of distress of weather or other necessity, or in case of the importation of wines, etc.

The warehousing system was extended by the establishment of private bonded warehouses. Act of Mar. 28, 1854, R. S. §§ 2964, 2965.

Merchandise arriving at certain ports, destined for certain other ports, may be shipped to destination in bond without appraisement and liquidation of duties. See 2 Supp. R. S. 3, note.

Where warehouses are situated in a state, and their business carried on therein exclusively, a state statute prescribing regulations for their governance is not unconstitutional, it being a matter of purely domestic concern, and even where their business affects interstate as well as state commerce, such a statute can be enforced until congress acts in reference to their interstate relations; 94 U. S. 113.

Goods stored in a United States bonded warehouse on which duties remain unpaid are in possession of the United States, and an order directing a warehouseman to deliver them to a vendee, even though accepted by the warehouseman, does not constitute a constructive or symbolical delivery, or a receipt or an acceptance of the goods sufficient to satisfy the statute of frauds; 2 Sawy. 428.

Every distiller of spirits shall provide a warehouse on his distillery premises to be used only for storage of distilled spirits of his own manufacture under an internal revenue storekeeper and to be considered a bonded warehouse of the United States; R. S. § 3271 et seq.

The word "warehouse," when used alone, means a bonded warehouse; 154 U. S. 51, 87.

See POLICE POWER; RATES; WAREHOUSE-MAN.

WAREHOUSE, BONDED. See BONDED WAREHOUSE.

WAREHOUSEMAN. A person who receives goods and merchandise to be stored in his warehouse for hire. He is not a guarantor of the title of property placed in his custody, although his receipts therefor are by statute negotiable; 103 U. S. 352.

He is bound to use ordinary care in preserving such goods and merchandise, and his neglect to do so will render him liable to the owner; 1 Esp. 315; Story, Bailm. § 444; 12 Johns. 292; 2 Wend. 593; 2 Ala. 284; 13 Fed. Rep. 69; 115 Mass. 332; 20 Hun 438; 70 Ill. 121; 85 Ind. 201. The warehouseman's liability commences as soon as the goods arrive and the crane of the warehouse is applied to raise them into the warehouse; 4 Esp. 282. See 102 N. C. 890; 51 Barb. 148. He cannot have possession of another man's property, with its accompanying duties and responsibilities forced upon him against his will; 45 N. J. Eq. 50.

A common carrier in providing a place where packages may be checked and kept for a fee is a warehouseman and may limit his liability for loss of a package by stipulation on the back of the receipt. 81 S. C. 279.

Warehousemen have a lien on property left in their custody, for their hire, labor, and services; 1 Esp. 109; 7 W. & S. 466;

Jones; Liens § 967; being due on all goods stored under a single contract; 53 Fed. Rep. 401; though in some cases this lien has been looked upon only as specific, and not general; 13 Ark. 446. See Story, Bailm. 452; 3 Kent § 635; 14 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 463. A warehouseman cannot recover storage for property stored for a certain time for a definite sum, where it is destroyed within the time, without his negligence; 83 Pac. Rep. (Cal.) 635; 36 Hun 194; but under a custom to collect charges when the goods are ordered out, their accidental burning will not release the owner from paying storage; 15 S. Rep. (Ala.) 143. Grain delivered to a warehouseman upon the agreement that it may be mixed with other of like grade, and held for the owner is a bailment not a sale; 38 Ill. App. 98.

A statute requiring warehousemen operating public elevators to insure grain at their own expense is valid; 153 U. S. 391. See WEARFINGER; RATES.

Warehouse Receipts. Receipts given by a warehouseman for chattels placed in his possession for storage purposes. 40 Ill. 330. They are not in a technical sense negotiable instruments, but have been made so in many of the states by special statute; 3 Ames, Bills & N. 782. It has been held, that, even where no statute has been enacted on this subject, inasmuch as these instruments have come to be considered the representatives of property, and an assignment is equivalent to the delivery of property, the warehouseman is estopped, as against an assignee for value without notice, to set up facts or agreements contradictory to their terms; 14 Cent. L. J. 432 (Tenn.). In order that receipts should be construed as warehouse receipts the special statutes on the subject must be strictly complied with; 9 Biss. 396; 101 U. S. 557. The holder of such receipts takes the same title to the goods as if the goods themselves had been delivered to him; 19 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 303 (Ky.). See 43 Wisc. 267; 78 Ga. 574; 6 Colo. 356; 11 Or. 277.

See LIEN; BILL OF LADING; RATES; IMPAIRING THE OBLIGATION OF CONTRACTS.

WARRANTICE. In Scotch Law. A clause in a charter of heritable rights, by which the grantor obliges himself that the right conveyed shall be effectual to the receiver. It is either personal or real. A warranty. Erskine, Inst. 2. 3. 11.

WARRANT. A writ issued by a justice of the peace or other authorized officer, directed to a constable or other proper person, requiring him to arrest a person therein named, charged with committing some offence, and to bring him before that or some other justice of the peace.

Warrant and commission, outside of naval technicality, are synonymous words. There is no difference in force between a commission and a warrant as used in the navy, except that one recites that the appointment is made by and with the advice and consent of the senate, and the other does not. Both are signed by the president; 18 Ct. Cls. 548.

A bench-warrant is a process granted by a court, authorizing a proper officer to apprehend and bring before it some one charged with some contempt, crime, or misdemeanor. See BENCH-WARRANT.

A search-warrant is a process issued by a competent court or officer authorizing an officer therein named or described to examine a house or other place for the purpose of finding goods which it is alleged have been stolen. See SEARCH-WARRANT.

Under the English Extradition Act of 1870, 38 & 34 Vict. c. 62, § 26, a warrant is defined as "any judicial document authorizing the arrest of a person accused or convicted of crime." 51 L. J. Q. B. 419; 9 Q. B. D. 98.

A warrant should regularly bear the hand and seal of the justice, and be dated. It should contain a command to the officer to make a return thereof and of his doings thereon. But the want of such a command does not excuse him from the obligation of making a proper return; 8 Cush. 488. And it is no ground for discharging a defendant that the warrant does not contain such a command; 3 Gray 74. No warrant ought to be issued except upon the oath or affirmation of the witness charging the defendant with the offence; 3 Binn. 88. A warrant will not justify the arrest of one not named therein, by reason of the fact that the name used was supposed to be his; 158 U. S. 78. It is competent to show that the affidavit was not filed until after the arrest; 136 Ind. 105. Under a statute authorizing a habeas corpus to determine the identity of the person arrested, the inquiry may embrace the sufficiency of the papers; 15 Misc. Rep. 303. In England a person riding a bicycle without a light at night cannot be arrested or even stopped to ascertain his name and address, without a warrant; [1897] 2 Q. B. 452.

The reprehensible practice of issuing blank warrants, which once prevailed in England, was never adopted here. 2 Russ. Cr. 513; Ld. Raym. 546; 1 H. Bla. 18. See SEARCH-WARRANT; ARREST; MILITARY BOUNTY LAND.

WARRANT OF ATTORNEY. An instrument in writing, addressed to one or more attorneys therein named, authorizing them, generally, to appear in any court, or in some specified court, on behalf of the person giving it, and to confess judgment in favor of some particular person therein named, in an action of debt, and usually containing a stipulation not to bring any writ of error, or file a bill in equity, so as to delay him.

This general authority is usually qualified by reciting a bond which commonly accompanies it, together with the condition annexed to it, or by a written defeasance stating the terms upon which it was given and restraining the creditor from making immediate use of it. In form, it is, generally, by deed; but it seems it need not necessarily be so; 5 Taunt. 264. This instrument is given to the creditor as a security. Possessing it, he may sign judgment, without its being necessary to wait the termination of an action. See 14 East 576; 2 Term 100.

A warrant of attorney given to confess a judgment is not revocable, and notwithstanding a revocation, judgment may be entered upon it; 2 Ld. Raym. 766, 850. The death of the debtor is, however, generally speaking, a revocation; Co. Litt. 52 b. In Pennsylvania, judgment may be entered by the prothonotary on such a warrant without the intervention of an attorney; 4 Sm. L. 278; the instrument must show on its face the amount due, unless it can be rendered certain by mere calculation; 73 Pa. 354. The general power ceases with the entry of judgment; 8 Johns. 361; 9 Minn. 53; contra, 1 Me. 257; 18 Wis. 575.

The virtue of a warrant of attorney is spent by the entry of one judgment, and a second judgment entered on the same warrant is irregular; 6 S. & R. 296; 3 Wash. C. C. 558. See POWER OF ATTORNEY.

WARRANTEE. One to whom a warranty is made. Sheppard, Touchst. 181.

WARRANTIA CHARTA. An ancient and now obsolete writ which was issued when a man was enfeoffed of land with warranty and then he was sued or impleaded in assize or other action, in which he could not vouch or call to warranty.

It was brought by the feoffor pending the first suit against him, and had this valuable incident, that when the warrantor was vouched, and judgment passed against the tenant, the latter obtained judgment simultaneously against the warrantor, to recover other lands of equal value. 2 Rand. 141, 156; 11 S. & R. 116.

WARRANTIES AND REPRESENTATIONS. Distinction. The difference between the terms as used in an insurance policy is this: In case of "warranties," the answers must be literally true, and an answer that is not literally true will avoid the policy. Where the statements are "representations," however, the answers must be substantially true, and a misrepresentation that is not material or fraudulent will not prevent a recovery on the policy. 148 Ky. 557, 146 S. W. 1121.

WARRANTOR. One who makes a warranty. Shepp. Touchst. 181.

WARRANTY. In Insurance. A stipulation or agreement on the part of the insured party, in the nature of a condition.

An express warranty is a particular stipulation introduced into the written contract by the agreement of the parties.

An implied warranty is an agreement which necessarily results from the nature of the contract: as, that the ship shall be seaworthy when she sails on the voyage insured.

An express warranty usually appears in the form of a condition, expressed or directly implied in the phraseology of the policy, stipulating that certain facts are or shall be true, or certain acts are or shall be done by the assured, who by accepting the insurance ratifies the stipulation.

Where the stipulation relates wholly to the future, it is a promissory condition or warranty; 1 Phill. Ins. § 754.

An express warranty must be strictly complied with; and the assured is not permitted to allege, in excuse for non-compliance, that the risk was not thereby affected, since the parties have agreed that the stipulated fact or act shall be the basis of the contract; 1 Phill. Ins. § 755; unless compliance is rendered illegal by a subsequent statute; id. § 760. All reasonable doubts as to whether statements inserted in or referred to in an insurance policy are warranties or representations should be resolved in favor of the assured; 58 Ark. 528; 51 N. J. L. 175.

A breach of warranty vitiates the insurance, though the insured made the warranty without knowledge of its falsity; 131 N. Y. 485; 48 Mo. App. 1; 20 U. S. App. 337; 9 L. R. Q. B. 328.

In a mercantile contract, a statement descriptive of the subject-matter, or of some material incident, such as the time or place of shipment, is ordinarily to be regarded as a warranty, or condition precedent, upon the failure of non-performance of which the party aggrieved may repudiate the whole contract. 115 U. S. 188. See IMPLIED WARRANTY.

The doctrine of the divers warranties and conditions in the different species of insurance has been the subject of a great mass of jurisprudence: viz.—

In fire policies, with reference to assignments of the insured property, or the policy; 17 N. Y. 424; 506; 6 Gray 160; 30 Pa. 311; 26 Conn. 165; 25 Ala. 355; 78 Ia. 216; 64 Miss. 1; conformity to charter; 32 N. H. 813; 8 Cush. 393; 1 Wall. 273; condition of the premises, including construction, locality, and manner of using; 18 N. Y. 168, 385; 8 Cush. 79; 81 N. H. 231; 2 Curt. 610; 4 Ohio St. 285; 27 Pa. 325; 4 R. I. 141; distance of other buildings; 7 N. Y. 153; 6 Gray 105; 81 Ia. 496; frauds; 26 N. H. 149, 157; 2 Ohio St. 452; 40 Mo. App. 276; kind of risk; 25 N. H. 550; 8 Md. 841; 6 McLean 324; 87 Minn. 300; smoking on premises; 127 U. S. 399; limiting right of action; 5 Gray 432; 6 Ohio 599; 5 R. I. 394; 24 Ga. 97; notice and demand; 18 Barb. 69; and proof of loss; 2 Gray 490; 11 N. Y. 81; 29 Pa. 198; 18 Ill. 558; 6 Ind. 187; other insurance; 13 N. Y. 79; 253; 23 Conn. 576; 5 Md. 165; 37 Me. 187; 9 Cush. 479; 4 N. J. 447; 21 Mo. 97; 86 Ala. 424; 71 Mich. 414; 98 N. C. 143; 31 Ill. App. 399; payment of premium; 18 Barb. 541; suspension of risk; 11 N. Y. 89; 48 Me. 893; title; 1 Curt. 193; 1 Cush. 280; 17 Mo. 247; 28 Pa. 50; 17 Mo. 247; 14 N. Y. 253; value; 11 Cush. 324; waiver of compliance with a warranty; 4 N. J. 67; 6 Gray 192; concealment of facts as to title; 150 Pa. 270; 16 Or. 283; 24 Neb. 358.

In life policies, with reference to assignment; 5 Sneed 259; representation, or other stipulations; 8 Gray 180; 1 Bosw.

338; 3 Md. 341; 21 Pa. 134; 13 La. Ann. 504; 19 Mo. 506; 74 Hun 385; 58 Ark. 528; 60 Fed. Rep. 727; 56 Conn. 528; that the insured is alive and in sound health; 14 App. Div. N. Y. 142. Where an application for life insurance is to be treated as a warranty it is to that extent a part of the policy; 75 Fed. Rep. 637. A warranty that the insured will not die by his own hand is valid; id. 637.

In marine policies, with reference to assignments; 53 La. 338; contraband trade; 43 Me. 460; other insurance; 17 N. Y. 401; seaworthiness; 3 Ind. 23; 1 Wheat. 399; 1 Binn. 592; 1 Johns. 241; 7 Pick. 250; 4 Mas. 439; 1 Camp. 1; 2 B. & Ald. 320; 5 M. & W. 414; Roccus, n. 22; 85 Me. 215; 124 U. S. 405; 136 id. 403; suspension of risk; 3 Gray 415; title; 19 N. Y. 179.

Waiver of the right to insist upon the performance of a condition may occur under a policy of this description; as, of the condition relative to assignment; 32 N. H. 95; or answers to questions; 7 Gray 261; or distance of buildings; 6 Gray 175; going out of limits; 33 Conn. 244; additional insurance; 1 Ind. App. 411; limitation of action; 14 N. Y. 253; 142 Pa. 332; offer of arbitration; 6 Gray 192; payment of premium or assessment; 25 Conn. 442; 88 Me. 439; 31 Pa. 438; proof of loss; 21 Mo. 81; seaworthiness; 37 Me. 137; title; 35 N. H. 328; 83 Me. 362. An insurance company cannot set up a forfeiture for a condition broken, against one whom its conduct has induced to believe that such provision would not be insisted upon; 134 Ill. 583; so an insurer is estopped to set up a breach of a warranty written by its agent for an illiterate person; 117 N. Y. 310; or made by the error of the agent; 79 Fed. Rep. 245.

A clause in a policy of insurance against fire, that nothing but a distinct specific agreement clearly expressed and indorsed on the policy shall operate as a waiver of any printed or written condition, warranty, or restriction thereon, is construed to refer to those conditions which enter into and form a part of the contract of insurance, and not to these stipulations which are to be performed after a loss has occurred, such as giving notice and furnishing preliminary proof of loss; 36 Ind. 102; May, Ins. 626.

See DEVIATION; POLICY; REPRESENTATION; SEAWORTHINESS.

In Sales of Personal Property. A warranty is an express or implied statement of something which a party undertakes shall be part of a contract, and, though part of the contract, collateral to the express object of it. Benj. Sales § 600. See 60 N. Y. 450.

An express warranty is one by which the warrantor covenants or undertakes to insure that the thing which is the subject of the contract is or is not as there mentioned; as, that a horse is sound; that he is not five years old.

Where there is an express warranty on the sale of goods to be delivered, the buyer is not estopped by accepting the goods; but he can retain the same, stand on his warranty, and recover for the breach. See 81 Wis. 399.

To create an express warranty, the word "warrant" need not be used, nor are any particular words necessary; 75 Cal. 558.

An implied warranty is one which, not being expressly made, the law implies by the facts of the sale. Cro. Jac. 197.

In general, there is no implied warranty of the quality of the goods sold; 2 Kent 874; Co. Litt. 102 a; 1 Pet. 317; 1 Johns. 274; 4 Conn. 428; 18 Pick. 59; 72 Pa. 229; 4 Hayw. 227; especially in cases of a specific chattel already existing which the buyer has inspected; 4 M. & W. 64; 42 N. H. 165.

But where a chattel is to be made or supplied to the order of the purchaser, there is an implied warranty that it is fit for the purpose for which it is ordinarily used, or for which it has been specially made; Benj. Sales § 645; 53 N. Y. 515; 87 Neb. 88; 50 Mo. App. 121; 21 Or. 289. Thus where a party conveyed a ship to another by deed, but at the time of the conveyance the ship was ashore in a wrecked and ruinous condition, it was held that there was an implied warranty that the article conveyed should be a ship, and not a mere "bundle of timber"; 3 M. & W. 590. Another exception is in the sale of goods by sample. There is a warranty that their quality is equal to the sample; 13 Mass. 139; 3 Rawle 37; 44 N. Y. 289; 64 Hun 634; 73 Ia. 712; but a sale of goods by sample only binds the vendor to supply goods equal to sample, and not goods fit for a particular purpose; 37 S. C. 7. See SAMPLE. An implied warranty may also result from the usage of a particular trade; 2 Disney 482; 4 Taunt. 847. In a sale by description of goods not inspected by the buyer, there is an implied warranty that the goods are salable or merchantable; 24 Wisc. 508; 21 Ia. 508; 53 N. Y. 518; 4 Camp. 144; 76 Ga. 629; 16 Or. 381; but see 23 Me. 212; and an express warranty of quality excludes any implied warranty that the articles sold are merchantable or fit for their intended use; 134 U. S. 306. It has been held that words of description constitute a warranty that the articles sold are of the quality and description so described; 11 Pick. 99; 3 Rawle 23; but the better opinion has been said to be that the words of description constitute not a warranty of the description, but a condition precedent to the seller's right of action, that the thing which he offers to deliver, or has delivered, should answer the description; 4 M. & W. 39. Where the buyer relies on the seller's skill and judgment to supply him an article, there is an implied warranty that the article will suit the desired purpose; 2 M. & G. 279; Benj. Sales § 661. Finally, it is said that there is always an implied warranty in sales of provisions for household use; 18 Pick. 57; 18 Mich. 51; 50 Barb. 118. But see Benj. Sales § 670.

In the sale of commercial paper without indorsement or express assumption of liability on the paper itself, the contract of sale and the obligations which arise from it as between vendor and vendee are governed by the common law relating to the sale of goods and chattels; and the undoubted rule is that in such a sale the obligation of the vendor is not restricted to the mere question of forgery vel non, but depends on whether he has delivered that which he contracted to sell, this rule being designated in England as a condition of the principal contract, and in this country being generally termed an implied warranty of identity of the thing sold; 163 U. S. 385.

The rule of the civil law was that a fair price implied a warranty of quality; Dig. 21. 2. 1. This rule has been adopted in Louisiana; 1 La. Ann. 27; and in South Carolina; 1 Bay 324. There may be an implied warranty as to character; 13 Mass. 139; 2 Harr. & G. 495; 20 Johns. 204; 4 B. & C. 108; and even as to quality, from statements of the seller; 40 Me. 9; 24 Barb. 549. See 2 Misc. Rep. 295.

A purchaser may examine an article and exercise his judgment upon it, and at the same time protect himself by a warranty; 153 Mass. 178; but if he elects not to accept the property as not answering the warranty, there is no duty imposed upon either party thereafter to make further tests or experiments to see whether the property complies with the warranty; 9 U. S. App. 550.

It is settled that in an executory agreement the vendor warrants, by implication, his title to the goods which he promises to sell, and that in the sale of an ascertained specific chattel, an affirmation by the vendor that the chattel is his is equivalent to a warranty of title, and that this affirmation may be implied from his conduct as well as his words. It is further said that the present rule in England is, in the absence of such implication or affirmation, that the sale of a personal chattel implies an affirmation by the vendor that the chattel is his, and, therefore, he warrants the title, unless it be shown by the facts and circumstances of the sale that the vendor did not intend to assert ownership, but only to transfer such interest as he might have in the chattel sold; Benj. Sales §§ 627, 639.

As to the goods in the possession of the vendor, there is an implied warranty of title; but where the goods sold are in possession of a third party at the time of the sale, then there is no such warranty; 36 Me. 501; 28 Miss. 772; 2 Kent 478; 8 Mont. 380; 25 Neb. 360; 39 Kan. 865; 47 Minn. 500; 122 Pa. 7; contra, 3 Term 58; 17 C. B. N. s. 708.

An implied warranty of quality exists in cases of the sale of food provisions on grounds of public policy, but the exception is limited to sales for immediate consumption; 73 N. W. Rep. (Minn.) 183; 145 Mass. 439; 49 N. E. Rep. (Ill.) 210. See 18 N. Y. L. J. (Feb. 18, 1898).

A vendor knowing he has no title, and concealing the fact from the vendee, is liable on the ground of fraud; Benj. Sales § 637.

Antecedent representations, made as an inducement to the buyer, but not forming part of the contract when concluded, are not warranties; it is not, however, necessary that the representation should be made simultaneously with the bargain, but only that it should enter into it; 15 C. B. 130; Benj. Sales § 610. Nospecial form of words is necessary to constitute a warranty; 45 Cal. 573; 75 id. 338; 75 Ill. 81; 4 Daly 277; 3 Mod. 261. The question is for the jury, to be inferred from the sale and the circumstances of the particular case; 8 Cow. 25; 9 N. H. 111; 149 Pa. 458; 63 Hun 636; 75 Cal. 558; even if the contract is written; Benj. Sales § 614; but see 10 Allen 242. The rule is simpliciter commendatio non obligat. See 2 Esp. 572. A warranty made after a sale requires a new consideration; 3 Q. B. 234; 100 Mass. 532. See 148 Mass. 608; representations made after a sale is complete and after delivery, and not entering into the consideration, cannot amount to a warranty; 63 Mich. 157.

Where one orders a specific article, there is only an implied warranty that the article supplied shall correspond with the designation and no implied agreement that it shall be fit for the purpose for which the buyer designed it; 28 U. S. App. 87.

Where a known, described, and definite article is ordered of a manufacturer, though he has notice that it is required for a particular purpose, there is no implied warranty that it shall answer that purpose; 141 U. S. 510. Affirmations of the essential qualities of goods made by the vendor and relied upon by the vendee, constitute an express warranty; 15 U. S. App. 218.

Proposals made by an equipment company to a street railway company to furnish electric equipment which should comply with certain conditions of performances, are affirmations of quality amounting to a warranty; 27 U. S. App. 364. Where there is a complete contract of sale in writing, there can be no implied warranty as to the subject-matter; 43 Ill. App. 175; 83 Cent. L. J. 70. As to implied warranty in a manufacturer's executory contract of sale, see 86 Cent. L. J. 192. In the sale of a patent there is an implied warranty of title, without regard to the form of the instrument of transfer; 3 Fed. Rep. 898. In Louisiana a warranty, while not of the essence, is of the nature of a contract of sale, and is implied in every such contract; 168 U. S. 386.

In Sales of Real Property. A real covenant, whereby the grantor of an estate of freehold and his heirs were bound to warrant the title, and, either upon voucher or by judgment in a writ of warrantia chartae, to yield other lands to the value of those from which there has been an eviction by a paramount title. Co. Litt. 885 a.

Collateral warranty existed when the heir's title was not derived from the warranting ancestor, and yet it barred the heir from claiming the land by any collateral title, upon the presumption that he might thereafter have assets by descent from or through the ancestor; and it imposed upon him the obligation of giving the warrantee other lands in case of eviction, provided he had assets. 2 Bla. Com. 301.

Lineal warranty existed when the heir derived title to the land warrantied, either from or through the ancestor who made the warranty.

The statute of 4 Anne, c. 16, annulled these collateral warranties, which had become a great grievance. Warranty in its original form has never, it is presumed, been known in the United States. The more plain and pliable form of a covenant has been adopted in its place; and this covenant, like all other covenants, has always been held to sound in damages, which, after judgment, may be recovered out of the personal or real estate, as in other cases. And in England the matter has become one of curious learning and of little or no practical importance. See 4 Kent 469; 8 Rawle 67, n.; 2 Wheat. 45; 1 Summ. 338; 17 Pick. 14; 1 Ired. 509; 2 Saund. 88, n. 5.

Mr. Rawle, in his work on Covenants for Title 205, says there is no evidence that the covenants of warranty as employed in the United States ever had a place in English conveyancing. In the earlier conveyances which remain on record in the colonies are to be found some or all of the covenants which were coming into use in the mother country, together with a clause of warranty, sometimes with and sometimes without the addition of words of covenant. Later the words of covenant became more general, and at the present day their use is almost universal. As to the extent and scope of the American covenant of warranty, the sounder view is that it is merely a covenant for quiet enjoyment, the only difference being that under the latter, a recovery may sometimes be had where it would be denied under the former. See COVENANT.

Implied Warranty. Such as is imputed in law upon the whole transaction; as, that the seller has title, that the goods are fairly merchantable, or will fairly answer the purpose for which they are known to be bought; that the bulk of the goods, sold by sample, corresponds with the sample; that there are no defects, where the buyer defers to the seller's judgment, except as to obvious defects. Anderson; Story, Contr. 329 et al.

WARRANTY VOUCHER TO. In Old Practice. The calling a warrantor into court by the party warranted (when tenant in a real action brought for recovery of such lands), to defend the suit for him; Co. Litt. 101 b; 2 Saund. 82, n. 1; and the time of such voucher is after the demandant has counted.

It lies in most real and mixed actions, but not in personal. Where the voucher has been made and allowed by the court, the vouchee either voluntarily appears, or there issues a judicial writ (called a summons ad warrantizandum), commanding the sheriff to summon him. Where he, either voluntarily or in obedience to this writ, appears and offers to warrant the land to the tenant, it is called entering into the warranty; after which he is considered as tenant in the action, in the place of the original tenant. The demandant then counts against him de novo, the vouchee pleads to the new count, and the cause proceeds to issue.

WARREN (Germ. wahren, French garrenne). A place privileged by prescription or grant of the king for the preservation of hares, conies, partridges, and pheasants, or any of them. An action lies for killing beasts of warren inside the warren; but they may be killed damage feasant on another's land; 5 Co. 104. It need not be inclosed; Co. 4th Inst. 318.

WASHINGTON. One of the states of the United States of America.

By the act February 22, 1889, the people of Washington were enabled to form a constitution and state government, and be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original states. Accordingly, after all the requirements had been complied with on November 11, 1889, the president by proclamation announced the admission of Washington into the Union.

WASTE. Spoil or destruction, done or permitted, to lands, houses, or other corporeal hereditaments, by the tenant thereof to the prejudice of the heir or of him in reversion or remainder.

"Any unauthorized act of a tenant for a freehold estate not of inheritance, or for any lesser interest, which tends to the destruction of the tenement, or otherwise to the injury of the inheritance." Poll. Torts 327.

Permissive waste consists in the mere neglect or omission to do what will prevent injury: as, to suffer a house to go to decay for the want of repair. And it may be incurred in respect to the soil, as well as to the buildings, trees, fences, or live stock on the premises. See infra.

Voluntary waste consists in the commission of some destructive act: as, in pulling down a house or ploughing up a flower-garden. 1 Paige, Ch. 573.

Equitable waste may be defined as such acts as at law would not be esteemed to be waste under the circumstances of the case, but which in the view of a court of equity are so esteemed from their manifest injury to the inheritance, although they are not inconsistent with the legal rights of the party committing them. 2 Story, Eq. Jur. § 915.

Voluntary waste is committed upon cultivated fields, orchards, gardens, meadows, and the like, whenever a tenant uses them contrary to the usual course of husbandry or in such a manner as to exhaust the soil by negligent or improper tillage; 6 Ves. Ch. 328; 2 Hill 157; 2 B. & P. 66. It is, therefore, waste to convert arable into wood land, or the contrary; Co. Litt. 53 b. Cutting down fruit-trees, although planted by the tenant himself, is waste; 2 Rolle, Abr. 817; and it was held to be waste for an outgoing tenant of garden-ground to plough up strawberry-beds which he had bought of a former tenant when he entered; 1 Camp. 227. When lands are leased on which there are open mines of metal or coal, or pits of gravel, lime, clay, brick, earth, stone, and the like, the tenant may dig out of such mines or pits; but he cannot open any new mines or pits without being guilty of waste; Co. Litt. 53 b; 110 Pa. 478. See 64 Cal. 134; MINES; OIL. Any carrying away of the soil is also waste; Comyns, Dig. Waste (D 4); 6 Barb. 18; Co. Litt. 53 b; 1 Sch. & L. 8. And so is the taking of clay from the soil and manufacturing it into bricks and selling the same; 31 W. Va. 631; 18 Q. B. 591. A tenant in common who quarries stone from the common property is guilty of waste; 117 Mo. 414; and a life tenant who unlawfully removes petroleum; 89 W. Va. 231.

Waste need not consist in loss of market value; it may be an injury in the sense of destroying identity; L. R. 20 Eq. 539.

It is committed in houses by removing things once fixed to the freehold, although they may have been erected by the lessee himself, unless they are mere fixtures. See FIXTURES. It may take place not only in pulling down houses or parts of them, but also in changing their forms; as, if the tenant pull down a house and erect a new one in its place, whether it be larger or smaller than the first; 2 Rolle, Abr. 815; 4 Utah 107; 13 Q. B. 588; or convert a parlor into a stable, or a grist-mill into a fulling-mill; ibid.; or turn two rooms into one; ibid. See 13 Q. B. 572; 14 Ves. 528. The placing of an excessive weight in a building, by reason of which it falls, is waste; 152 Mass. 567. The building of a house where there was none before was, by the strict rules of the common law, said to be waste; Co. Litt. 53 a; and taking it down after it was built was waste also; 1 B. & Ad. 181; 4 Pick. 810; 19 N. Y. 284; 16 Conn. 322; 2 McCord 329; 1 Harr. & J. 289; 1 Watts 878.

Voluntary waste may also be committed upon timber. The law of waste accommodates itself to the varying wants and conditions of different countries: that will not, for instance, be waste in an entire woodland country which would be so in cleared one. The clearing up of land for the purpose of tillage in a new country where trees abound is no injury to the inheritance, but, on the contrary, is a benefit to the remainderman, so long as there is sufficient timber left and the land cleared bears a proper relative proportion to the whole tract; 4 Kent 316; 5 Watts 463; 6 T. B. Monr. 343; 26 Wend. 122; see 99 N. C. 588; 81 Mich. 832; where timber is grown for sale, cutting timber would be a "mode of cultivation." See L. R. 18 Eq. 309; [1891] 3 Ch. 206.

The extent to which wood and timber on such land may be cut without waste is a question of fact for a jury; 7 Johns. 227. A tenant may always cut trees for the repair of the houses, fences, hedges, stiles, gates, and the like; Co. Litt. 58 b; 100 N. C. 41; 91 Ky. 533; and for making and repairing all instruments of husbandry; Wood, Inst. 344. See ESTOVERS. He may fell dead or dying timber; 110 Pa. 473; 11 Vt. 293. And he may, when unrestrained by the terms of the lease, cut timber for firewood, if there be not enough dead timber for such purposes; Com. Dig. Waste (D 5). But not ornamental trees or those planted for shelter; 6 Ves. Ch. 419; or to exclude objects from sight; 16 Ves. Ch. 375; 7 Ired. Eq. 197; 6 Barb. 9. He cannot promiscuously cut trees to make staves to be sold; 71 Wis. 386; nor railroad ties; 40 Mo. App. 515.

It is waste for a tenant for life to neglect to pay the interest on a mortgage whereby the land was sold to the prejudice of the remainderman; 16 Hun 226; and so of a failure to pay taxes; 51 Me. 434; 59 Miss. 289; 59 Wis. 557; 25 id. 670.

Windfalls are the property of the landlord; for whatever is severed by inevitable necessity, as, by a tempest, or by a trespasser, and by wrong, belongs to him who has the inheritance; 3 P. Wms. 268; 11 Co. 61.

In general, a tenant is answerable for waste although it is committed by a stranger; for he is the custodian of the property, and must take his remedy over; 2 Doug. 745; 1 Taunt. 198; 1 Denio 104.

Permissive waste to buildings consists in omitting to keep them in tenable repair; suffering the timbers to become rotten by neglecting to cover the house; or suffering the walls to fall into decay for want of plastering, or the foundation to be injured by neglecting to turn off a stream of water, and the like; Co. Litt. 53 a. See 41 N. J. Eq. 130; 59 Miss. 289; LANDLORD AND TENANT. Permissive waste in houses, however, as a general rule, is now only punishable when a tenant is bound to repair, either expressly or by implication; 4 B. & P. 298; 10 B. & C. 312. See 107 N. C. 630.

The redress for this injury is of two kinds, preventive and corrective. A reversioner or remainderman, in fee, for life, or for years, may now recover, by an ordinary action at law, all damages he has sustained by an act of voluntary waste committed by either his tenant or a stranger, provided the injury affects his reversion. But as against a tenant for years, or from year to year, he can only sustain an action for damages for permissive waste if his lease obliges the tenant to repair; 2 Saund. 252 d, note; 10 B. & C. 812; 41 Ch. D. 352. Where a particular course of user has been carried on for a considerable course of time, with the apparent knowledge and consent of the owner of the inheritance, all lawful presumptions will be made in favor of the lawfulness of the acts complained of; Poll. Torts 328; 4 App. Cas. 465. The statutes of the several states also provide special relief against waste in a great variety of cases, following, in general, the Statute of Gloucester, which not only forfeits the premises, but gives exemplary damages for all the injury done. The rules as to waste are less stringent in the western states than in the east.

These legal remedies, however, are still so inadequate, as well to prevent future waste as to give redress for waste already committed, that they have in a great measure given way to the remedy by bill in equity, by which not only future waste, whether voluntary or permissive, will be prevented, but an account may be decreed and compensation given for past waste in the same proceeding; 2 Mer. 408; 2 Story, Eq. Jur. 179. Complainant in an action for waste must either have actual possession, or must show in himself an actual, valid, subsisting title; 85 Tenn. 154.

A contingent remainderman may maintain an injunction to restrain waste by the life tenant; 81 W. Va. 621.

An action on the case in the nature of waste, will lie by the holder of a mortgage on lands, against a purchaser from the mortgagor of the equity of redemption, for acts of waste committed with a knowledge that the value of the security will be injured thereby. This was a case of new impression (so stated in both courts) and was decided on general principles; 4 N. Y. 110, affirming 4 Barb. 347.

The reversioner need not wait until waste has actually been committed before filing his bill; for if he ascertains that the tenant is about to commit any act which would operate as a permanent injury to the estate, or if he threatens or shows any intention to commit waste, the court will at once interfere and restrain him by injunction from doing so; 18 Ves. Ch. 355; 1 Johns. Ch. 435; 1 Jac. & W. 658.

Sometimes a tenant, whether for life or for years, by the instrument creating his estate, holds his lands without impeachment of waste. This expression is equivalent to a general permission to commit waste, and at common law would authorize him to cut timber, or open new mines and convert the produce to his own use; Co. Litt. 220; 1 Co. 81 b; 15 Ves. 425. But equity puts a limited construction upon this clause, and only allows a tenant those powers under it which a prudent tenant in fee would exercise, and will, therefore, restrain him from pulling down or dilapidating houses, destroying pleasure-houses, or prostrating trees planted for ornament or shelter; 2 Vern. 739; 6 Ves. 110.

As to remedy by writ of estrepement to prevent waste, see ESTREPEMENT; 2 Yeates 281; 3 Bla. Com. 226.

As to remedies in cases of fraud in committing waste, see Frauds 226-238.

Scrap-distinction. "Waste" as used in a tariff act generally refers to remnants and by-products of small value that have not the quality or utility either of the finished product or of the raw material. "Scrap" does retain the name and quality. 223 U. S. 501.

WASTE-BOOK. A book used among merchants. All the dealings of the merchants are recorded in this book in chronological order as they occur.

WASTEL. The finest sort of bread. Burrell; Britt. c. 30.

WASTE LANDS. See STATE LANDS.

WASTING OF HIS ESTATE. "Wasting of his estate," where he has no property, should be deemed to apply to and embrace a man's health, time, and labor, all of which, for the purpose of supporting himself and family, are essentially his estate. 18 B. M. (Ky.) 9; 7 Bush (Ky.) 307.

WATCH. To stand sentry and attend guard during the night-time. Certain officers called watchmen are appointed in most of the United States, whose duty it is to arrest all persons who are violating the law or breaking the peace. See 1 Bla. Com. 356; 1 Chitty, Cr. Law 14, 20.

WATCH AND WARD. A phrase used in the English law to denote the superintendence and care of certain officers whose duties are to protect the public from harm.

WATCHMAN. An officer in many cities and towns, whose duty it is to watch during the night and take care of the property of the inhabitants. He possesses, generally, the common-law authority of a constable to make arrests, where there is reasonable ground to suspect a felony, though there is no proof of a felony having been committed; 1 Chitty, Cr. Law 24; 1 B. & Ald. 227. See ARREST.

WATER. That liquid substance of which the sea, the rivers, and creeks are composed.

A pool of water, or a stream or water-course, is considered as part of the land; hence a pool of twenty acres would pass by the grant of twenty acres of land, without mentioning the water; 2 Bla. Com. 18; 2 N. H. 255, 391; 1 Wend. 255; 5 Conn. 497; 8 Pa. 13. A more grant of water passes only a fishery; Co. Litt. 4 b; 5 Cow. 216. But the owner of land over which water flows may grant the land, reserving the use of all the water to himself, or may grant the use of all or a portion of the water, reserving the fee of the land to himself; 26 Vt. 64; 3 Hill N. Y. 418; 6 Metc. 131. See THALWEG; MARITIME BELT.

WATER BAILIFF. In English Law. An officer appointed to search ships in ports. 10 Hen. VII. 30.

WATER COMPANY. A municipality has no implied power, from the mere fact of its creation, to engage in the business of supplying its citizens water for pay. It cannot do so except by virtue of express legislative authority. A municipality having such legislative authority, which has entered into a contract with an existing water company to supply the citizens with water, has thereby exhausted its power and cannot subsequently erect its own water works for the same purpose; 177 Pa. 643; 180 id. 509. See 186 Pa. 74; contra, in Rhode Island; 60 Fed. Rep. 611.

In Pennsylvania a water company under a statute which provides that water companies shall furnish pure water, will be enjoined from collecting water rents when it has supplied water utterly unfit for domestic use or for steam purposes. The courts cannot decree that the company must obtain a supply of pure water. They can only enjoin it from collecting water rents for impure water; 172 Pa. 489.

A water company which has a contract with a city to furnish water to extinguish fires is not liable to the owners of private property destroyed by fire through its failure to furnish water according to the contract; 88 Tex. 233; there is no privity of contract between the parties to the action; 46 Conn. 24; 83 Ga. 219; 139 Ind. 214; 34 Ia. 59; 37 Neb. 546; 78 Han 146; 11 Atl. Rep. (Pa.) 300; 8 Lea (Tenn.) 42; 81 Wis. 48; nor does the fact that the ordinance granting the franchise requires the company to supply the city and its inhabitants with sufficient water to put out fires, or to maintain the water at a certain pressure, create the necessary privity of contract; 83 Ga. 219; 37 Neb. 546; 81 Wis. 48; not even a statute, requiring the pipes to be kept charged at a certain pressure, will give the right of action; 2 Exch. Div. 441, reversing 6 L. R. Exch. 404. Such owner cannot maintain an action, even though the city has raised by taxation a special fund, to which the plaintiff contributed, to pay for a sufficient supply of water for use in case of fire; 79 Ia. 419; or though the citizens pay a special tax to the company, under its contract with the city; 119 Mo. 304. Nor has a municipality such an interest in the property destroyed as to give it a right of action, and the owner of the property destroyed cannot maintain an action as assignee of the right of action of the municipality; 16 Nev. 44. An action of tort will not lie; 83 Ga. 219. But it has been held that when the contract of a water company with the city declares that it is made, inter alia, for the protection of private property against destruction by fire, the owner of property which is taxed for water rent, and is destroyed by fire through the failure of the company to supply a sufficient quantity of water, may, in his own name, sue the company on its contract with the city; 89 Ky. 340.

A company for furnishing water to the public is subject to the visitatorial power of the state; 173 Pa. 506.

An existing system of water supply in a municipality which is the property of private individuals and is operated under a contract with the municipal corporation, is private property which may be acquired by eminent domain, on the payment of a just compensation, including compensation for the termination of the contract; 168 U. S. 683.

The right which a water company acquires by a lease from a riparian owner and not by the exercise of eminent domain is no greater than the right of the riparian owner; 182 Pa. 418.

A regulation by which the company refuses to turn on the water for a building until unpaid rates of previous owners are paid is unreasonable and void unless authorized by statute; 40 L. R. A. (Mass.) 657.

See WATER RENTS; RATES.

WATER-COURSE. This term is applied to the flow or movement of the water in rivers, creeks, and other streams.

It is a more comprehensive word than "river." In its most general sense, it means a course or channel in which water flows. In its legal sense, it consists of bed, banks, and water; a living stream confined in a channel, but not necessarily flowing all the time; 7 Ind. App. 309.

A water-course is a stream usually flowing in a particular direction, in a definite channel, and discharging into some other stream or body of water; and the term does not include surface-water conveyed from a higher to a lower level for limited periods during the melting of snow, or during or soon after the fall of rain, through hollows or ravines, which at other times are dry; 27 Wisc. 656. See 100 Mich. 424.

It must be a stream in fact, as distinguished from mere surface drainage rendered necessary by freshets or other extraordinary causes, though the flow of water need not be constant; 88 Neb. 406. See 118 Ind. 125; 21 Or. 35. A stream does not cease to be a water course and become mere surface water, because at certain points it spreads over a level meadow several rods in width, and flows for a distance without defined banks before flowing again into a definite channel; 16 Or. 185.

In a legal sense, property in a water-course is comprehended under the general name of land: so that a grant of land conveys to the grantor not only fields, meadows, and the like, but also all the rivers and streams which naturally pass over the surface of the land; 1 Co. Litt. 4; 2 N. H. 255; 5 Wend. 428. See WATER.

The right of a riparian proprietor to the flow of a stream over his land, may be severed from the land by grant, and where such right has been conveyed without reservation, the grantor cannot maintain an action to enjoin a diversion of water; 91 Cal. 146; 85 id. 219. See 16 Colo. 16.

Those who own land bounding upon a water-course are denominated by the civilians riparian proprietors; and this convenient term has been adopted in the common law; Ang. Wat.-Courses 8; 8 Kent 354; 55 Fed. Rep. 854.

In the United States all navigable water-courses are a species of highway, and come under the control of the states, except when they are used in foreign or interstate commerce, and then congress has authority over them; Cooley, Const. Lim. 589. See NAVIGABLE WATERS. States within which lands bordering on a river are situated have the right, not only to control and levee its banks, to prevent the adjoining country from overflow, but to compel riparian owners to maintain such levees at their own expense; 78 Cal. 125. See RIVER.

The public cannot, in the United States, gain any proprietary right in streams of inland water too small to be used for the transportation of property; Ang. Water-

C. § 2; 11 Me. 378. In the case of navigable waters used as a highway of commerce between the states or with foreign nations, no state can grant a monopoly for the navigation of any portion of such waters; 9 Wheat. 1; 146 U. S. 387; 85 Wis. 445; 144 N. Y. 88; 64 Fed. Rep. 436. A state has the same power to improve such waters as it has in the case of any highway; Cooley, Const. Lim. 738; 29 Fla. 1; 148 U. S. 313; 152 U. S. 1; 87 Wis. 151; and, having expended money for such improvement, it may impose tolls upon the commerce which has the benefit of the improvement; 3 McLean 238; 8 Bush 447. See 119 U. S. 543. The states may authorize the construction of bridges over such waters, for railroads and other species of highways, notwithstanding they may to some extent interfere with navigation. See Hare, Am. Const. L. 457, 487, 497; 4 Pick. 400; 38 Ill. 467; 50 Fed. Rep. 16; 83 Me. 419; 125 U. S. 1; 53 Fed. Rep. 549; BRIDGE. A state may establish ferries over such waters; 1 Black 603; 41 Miss. 37; and authorize the construction of dams; Cooley, Const. Lim. 740. A state may also regulate the speed and general conduct of ships and other vessels navigating its water highways, provided its regulations do not conflict with any regulations made by congress; 1 Hill N. Y. 469. See Cooley, Const. Lim. 737, 741.

The riparian proprietor owns to high-water mark on all navigable rivers; 21 Am. Dec. 707; and that mark is limited by the outflow of the medium high tide, between the spring and neap tides; 44 N. J. Eq. 398. See NAVIGABLE WATERS. The beds of navigable rivers between the lines of ordinary low water on their opposite sides belong to the state, to be held and controlled by and for the public; 123 Pa. 191. Water-courses above the flow of the tide are private, but, if sufficiently large to be of public use in transporting property, are highways over which the public have a common right in subservience to which the private ownership of the soil is to be enjoyed; 25 Am. Dec. 525.

By the rules of the common law, all proprietors of lands have precisely the same rights to waters flowing through their domains, and one can never be permitted to use the stream as to injure or annoy those situated on the course of it, either above or below him. They have no property in the water itself, but a simple usufruct: aqua currit et debet currere ut currere solebat, is the language of the law. Accordingly, while each successive riparian proprietor is entitled to the reasonable use of the water for the supply of his natural wants and for the operation of mills and machinery; 86 Ala. 587; 86 Ky. 44; 50 Me. 602; 44 N. H. 580; L. R. 2 Ex. 1; 24 Pa. 302; he has no right to flow the water back upon the proprietor above; Cro. Jac. 556; 20 Pa. 85; 1 B. & Ald. 874; 3 Green N. J. 116; 4 Ill. 452; 39 Me. 243; 62 Ala. 369; 50 Conn. 346; nor to discharge it so as to flood the proprietor below; 17 Johns. 306; 5 Vt. 371; 3 Harr. & J. 231; nor to divert the water; 17 Conn. 288; 18 Johns. 212; 24 Ala. n. s. 130; 29 Vt. 870; 22 Am. Dec. 745; 2 Dian. 400; 93 Cal. 407; 66 Hun 632; 29 N. Y. Supp. 729; 79 Wis. 834; 133 U. S. 541; 40 N. Y. 191; 81 Vt. 358; 182 Pa. 418; even for the purpose of irrigation, unless it be returned without essential diminution; 5 Pick. 175; 8 Me. 253; 12 Wend. 330; 4 Ill. 496; 75 Cal. 426; 24 Pa. 298; 8 Kent 440; nor to obstruct or detain it, except for some reasonable purpose, such as to obtain a head of water for a mill and to be again discharged, so as to allow all on the same stream a fair participation; 10 Cush. 367; 6 Ind. 324; 28 Vt. 459; 4 Mas. 401; 17 Johns. 805; 13 Conn. 303; 155 Pa. 523; 112 Mo. 6; 69 Tex. 617; 10 Ch. Div. 707; see DAM; nor to pollute the quality of the water by unwholesome or discolored impurities; 22 Barb. 297; 3 Rawle 397; 8 E. L. & E. 217; 4 Ohio 638; 62 Hun 306; 57 Fed. Rep. 1000; [1898] App. Cas. 691; 77 Ill. 440; 88 Ga. 187; but see, where the pollution results from a reasonable use, 78 Me. 297; 44 N. H. 580; 185 Ind. 547; 77 Ia. 576; as to turning surface-water off one's own land on to a neighbor's, see 31 Am. Rep. 216; 35 id. 431; 44 Ark. 360; 184 Ill. 96; 142 Miss. 110; 92 N. Y. 10; 183 Pa. 326. But, while such are the rights of the riparian proprietors when unaffected by contract, these rights are subject to endless modifications on the part of those entitled to their enjoyment either by grant; 3 Conn. 373; 13 Johns. 525; 17 Me. 281; 6 Metc. 181; 7 Pa. 348; 18 E. L. & E. 164; 9 N. H. 282; 3 N. Y. 253; or by reservation; 6 N. Y. 33; 20 Vt. 250; or by a license; 2 Gill 221; 18 Conn. 303; 14 S. & R. 267; or by agreement; 19 Pick. 448; Ang. Water-C. § 141; 8 Harr. & J. 282; 17 Wend. 130; see 110 Pa. 45; or by twenty years' adverse enjoyment from which a grant or contract will be implied; 1 Camp. 463; 4 Mas. 397; 6 Scott 167; 9 Pick. 251; Ang. Water-C. § 200; 47 Hun 333; 62 N. H. 293; 72 Ala. 277; in such a way as to adapt the uses of the water to the complex and multiplying demands and improvements of modern civilization. But there can be no prescriptive right to maintain an obstruction to the navigation of a public stream; 86 Ala. 88. It is not appurtenant to the land or taxable as part thereof or in itself, but only indirectly in connection with the value of the mill with which it is used; 37 Atl. Rep. (Me.) 331; contra, 64 N. H. 337.

Wherever a water-course divides two estates, each estate extends to the thread or central line of the stream; but the riparian owner of neither can lawfully carry off any part of the water without the consent of the other opposite, each riparian proprietor being entitled not to half or other proportion of the water, but to the whole bulk of the stream, undivided and undivisible, or per my et per tout; 8 Me. 253; 3 Sumn. 159; 13 Mass. 507; 1 Paige, Ch. 447; 2 Am. Dec. 574; 16 id. 342. If the bed of a water-course is suddenly changed, former boundaries and possessions are altered; but if the stream gradually gain on a person's land, the loser of the soil has no remedy; 2 Bla. Com. 262; 17 Vt. 387; Ang. Water-C. § 57; see 35 Fed. Rep. 188; [1899] 1 Ch. 73. A grant bounded by a navigable water-course extends only to high-water mark; but one bounded by a non-navigable stream extends to the middle thereof; 16 Am. Dec. 447; 30 id. 278, 286. See 140 U. S. 371; 152 id. 1; 4 Ia. 199; 94 U. S. 324; 11 Fed. Rep. 394. When an island is on the side of a river, so as to give the riparian owner of that side only one-fourth of the water, he has no right to place obstructions at the head of the island to cause one-half of the stream to descend on his side of the river, but the owner opposite is entitled to the flow of the remaining three-fourths; 10 Wend. 260.

The appropriation of the water of an unnavigable stream by a riparian owner in such quantities as to diminish unreasonably the supply of other riparian owners is a private nuisance, for which an injunction will lie; 58 Fed. Rep. 183; 2 Johns. Ch. 162.

Artificial water-courses, canals, sewers, water-works, etc., are wholly the creatures of statute, except when a man has a drain across another's land, and there it is generally a question of grant or easement. See 81 Atl. Rep. (Vt.) 291.

As to underground flow of water, see SUBTERRANEAN WATER; and see, also, 111 Cal. 639; 92 Ia. 297; 46 N. Y. Supp. 141; 161 Pa. 288; [1895] App. Cas. 587; 40 Pac. Rep. 709; 8 Ohio Cir. Ct. WATER MARK. See HIGH WATER MARK; TIDE.

WATER ORDEAL. See ORDEAL.

WATER RENTS. Water rents in a borough which owns the water-works and licenses those who desire to use its water to do so at rates fixed by its ordinance, are not in the nature of taxes, but are licenses, and not, therefore, collectible by the borough tax collector as such, but their collection may be delegated to the appointee of the borough council. 19 C. C. R. (Pa.) 414. As to legislative control of, see RATES.

Under a covenant by a lessor to pay "all water rents imposed or assessed upon the premises or on the lessor or lessees in respect thereof," the lessor is not bound to pay for water supplied by a water company to the lessees for trade purposes; (C. A.) [1897] 1 Ch. 633.

WATERCOURSES. See WATERS.

WATERED STOCK. See STOCK.

WATERGANG (Law Lat. watergangium). A Saxon word for a trench or course to carry a stream of water, such as are commonly made to drain water out of marshes. Ordin. Marisc. de Romn. Chart. Hen. III.

WATERGAVEL. A rent paid for fishing in, or other benefit from, some river. Chart. 15 Hen. III.

WATERS. Percolating Waters: As distinguished from sub-surface streams, are the waters beneath the earth's surface which do not have a known and defined channel. 30 Am. & Eng. Encyc. 2nd ed., 310; 111 Cal. 639. It has been held that underground bodies of water, though having defined channels, will be deemed percolating waters if their existence and location are unknown and not reasonably ascertainable. Id.; 80 Miss. 535. Hence, in order to prevent the classification of underground waters as percolating waters, they must be known or easily ascertainable and discoverable from the surface of the ground without subsurface explorations, (L. R. 9 Ir. 172), and underground waters are presumed to be percolating waters until it is shown that they flow in a well-known and defined channel. Id.; L. R. 17 Ir. 459. After percolating waters have reached the waters of a water-course they lose their character as percolating waters. Id.; 37 Oregon 256.

Underground Watercourses: Subterranean watercourses which flow in known and defined channels are governed by the same rules, with regard to their diversion and the correlative rights of the landowners through whose land they run, as are applied to surface watercourses. Id.; 6 Exch. 353. In order, however, that the rules applicable to surface watercourses shall be applied to subterranean streams, the channels of such streams must be known and defined, otherwise they will be considered as percolating waters and will be governed by the rules applicable to the latter class of waters. Id.; 7 H. L. Cas. 349.

Surface Waters: Waters on the surface of the ground which are of a casual or vagrant character, following no definite course and having no substantial or permanent existence, and which are lost by being diffused over the surface of the ground, through percolation into the soil and by evaporation. Id.; L. R. 6 Ch. 486; 108 Ind. 13 et al. They are to be distinguished from watercourses, to wit, streams usually flowing in definite channels, and from lakes and ponds, to wit, bodies of water confined in depressions of the earth and having a substantial as distinguished from a vagrant existence. Thus, waters from rain or melting snow, having no banks or channel in the flow in a known direction or course (21 Iowa 166), as in the case of valleys and depressions accustomed to find their way. Id.; 86 N. Y. 140. Whether water is or is not surface water must be determined from the peculiar facts in the case in which the question is presented. Id.; 53 Neb. 237. After waters which in their first instance were surface waters have reached and become a part of a watercourse, or a permanent lake or pond, they lose their character as surface waters. Id.; 11 Exch. 602. See WATER-COURSE.

WAVESON. Such goods as appear upon the waves after shipwreck. Jacob, Law Dict.

WAY. A passage, street, or road.

A right of way is the privilege which an individual, or a particular description of individuals, as, the inhabitants of a village or the owners or occupiers of certain farms, have of going over another's ground. It is an incorporeal hereditament of a real nature, entirely different from a common highway. Cruise, Dig. tit. xxiv. s. 1.

A right to pass over another's land more or less frequently according to the nature of the use to be made of the easement, and how frequently is immaterial, provided it occurred as often as the claimant had occasion or chose to pass. 105 Mass. 819.

A right of way may arise: By prescription and immemorial usage, or by an uninterrupted enjoyment for twenty years under a claim of right; Co. Litt. 118; 4 Gray 177, 547; 20 Pa. 331, 458; 4 Mas. 402; 24 N. H. 440; 130 Ind. 31; 75 Fed. Rep. 520; 86 Hun 384; 93 Ga. 800. By grant; as, where the owner grants to another the liberty of passing over his land; 1 Ld. Raym. 75; 19 Pick. 250; 7 B. & C. 257. (See 93 Mich. 599.) If the grant be of a freehold right it must be by deed; 5 B. & C. 221; 4 R. I. 47. By necessity; as, where a man purchases land accessible only over land of the vendor, or sells, reserving land accessible only over land of the vendee, he shall have a way of necessity over the land which gives access to his purchase or reservation; 5 Taunt. 311; 23 Pa. 333; 2 Mass. 203; 11 Mo. 513; 29 Me. 499; 27 N. H. 448; 19 Wend. 507; 15 Conn. 39; 126 Mass. 445; 55 Cal. 350; 102 Cal. 362; 40 Kan. 203; 85 Cal. 131; and this may exist even after the vendor has conveyed his land to a third person; 123 Ind. 372; but a way of necessity is not created by the fact that a road over grantor's land would be of less distance to a highway than a road already established; 118 Mo. 379. The necessity must be absolute, not a mere convenience; 2 M'CORD 445; 24 Pick. 102; 69 Me. 323; 91 id. 227; 107 N. C. 63; 98 Mass. 50; 126 id. 445; 11 Ch. Div. 968; 2 Allen 543; L. R. 9 Ch. 111; contra, 7 Barb. 309; and when it ceases the way ceases with it; 18 Conn. 321; 1 Barb. Ch. 853. By implication; 90 Tenn. 556. By reservation expressly made in the grant of the land over which it is claimed; 10 Mass. 183; 25 Conn. 831. By custom; as where navigators have a right of this nature to tow along the banks of navigable rivers with horses; 8 Term 253. By acts of legislature; though a private way cannot be so laid out without the consent of the owner of the land over which it is to pass; 15 Conn. 39, 83; 4 Hill 47, 140; 4 B. Monr. 57.

A right of way may be either a right in gross, which is a purely personal right incommunicable to another, or a right appurtenant or annexed to an estate, and which may pass by assignment with the estate to which it is appurtenant; 3 Kent 420; 1 Watts 35; 19 Pick. 250. A right of way appurtenant to land is appurtenant to all and every part of the land, and if such land be divided and conveyed in separate parcels, a right of way thereby passes to each of the grantees; 1 Cush. 285; 1 S. & R. 229. A way is never presumed to be in gross when it can be construed to be appurtenant to land; 83 Va. 463; 1 Wood, Ry. Law 697. Where a way appurtenant to land granted is not located by the grant, the parties may locate it by parol agreement at any point on the premises over which the right is granted; 65 Vt. 833.

Ways may be abandoned by agreement, by evident intention, or by long non-user. Twenty years' occupation of land adverse to a right of way and inconsistent therewith bars the right; 2 Whart. 123; 16 Barb. 184; 5 Gray 409. Where a way of necessity once existed it will be presumed to exist until some fact is shown establishing non-existence; 102 Cal. 862.

Ways may be assigned, except when they are in gross, which is a mere personal right, and cannot be granted to another; 19 Ill. 533.

A person cannot acquire a prescriptive right of way over his own lands, or the lands of another which he occupies as tenant; 118 Mo. 379; and where one has uninterruptedly used a way over another's land for the necessary length of time to establish an easement by adverse user, it will be presumed that the user was adverse, and under claim of title, and the burden is on one claiming that it was by virtue of a license to prove that fact; 68 Hun 289.

The owner of a right of way may disturb the soil to pave and repair it. But a way granted for one purpose cannot be used for another; 10 Gray 61; 11 id. 150.

A person having a right of way which is obstructed by a house erected upon the way may, after notice and request to remove it, pull it down, although it is actually inhabited; [1891] 3 Ch. 411.

Lord Coke, adopting the civil law, says there are three kinds of ways: a footway, called iter; a footway and horseway, called actus; a cartway, which contains the other two, called via; Co. Litt. 58 a. To which may be added a driftway, a road over which cattle are driven; 1 Taunt. 279.

See 3 Kent 419; Washb.; Jones, Easem.; Crabb, R. P.; Cruise, Dig.; HIGHWAY; STREET; EASEMENT; THOROUGHFARE.

WAY-BILL. A writing in which are set down the names of passengers who are carried in a public conveyance, or the description of goods sent with a common carrier by land.

WAY-GOING CROP. In Pennsylvania. By the custom of the country, a tenant for a term certain is entitled, after the expiration of his lease, to enter and take away the crop of grain which he had put into the ground the preceding fall. This is called the way-going crop; 5 Binn. 289; 2 S. & R. 14; 1 Pa. 224. See AWAY-GOING CROP; EMBLEMENTS.

WAYS AND MEANS. In legislative assemblies, there is usually appointed a committee whose duties are to inquire into and propose to the house the ways and means to be adopted to raise funds for the use of the government. This body is called the committee of ways and means.

WEAPON. An instrument of offensive or defensive combat. Statutes have been passed in many of the states prohibiting the carrying of concealed weapons. They are merely police regulations; 13 La. Ann. 399. To constitute the offence locomotion is not necessary, the possession is sufficient; 31 Ala. 387; even if the weapon is not in perfect order and ready for use; 58 id. 508; 6 Blackf. 31; 45 Miss. 668. Persons on their own premises; 45 Ark. 536; or on a journey (see TRAVELLER); or having good reasons to fear bodily harm; 89 Ala. 61; are exempted from the operation of such statutes; as are officers of the law; 18 Tex. App. 57. See ARMS; CONCEALED WEAPONS.

The ordinary implements of war are lawful: swords, fire-arms, and cannon, and even those which are secret or concealed, such as pits and mines. But this does not include poisoned weapons of any kind. Great Britain, France, Prussia, Russia, and other nations united in a declaration at St. Petersburg in 1868, by which they agreed to renounce, in case of war among themselves, the employment of any projectile of a weight less than 400 grammes, charged with fulminating or inflammable substances. 1 Halleck, Int. L., Baker's ed. 568.

WEAR, WEIR. A dam made across a river accommodated for the taking of fish or to convey a stream to a mill. Jacob. See DAM.

WEAR AND TEAR. Destruction to some extent, e. g. destruction of surface by ordinary friction, but the words do not include total destruction by a catastrophe which was never contemplated by either party. 5 C. P. Div. 507.

Natural and reasonable wear and tear covers only such decay or depreciation in value of the property as may arise from ordinary and reasonable use; and injury by a freshet is not within the exception; 20 N. J. L. 547.

WEARING APPAREL. As generally used in statutes, refers not merely to a person's outer clothing, but covers all articles usually worn, and includes underclothing. 147 U. S. 494. It may include a gold watch; 2 Flipp. 825; 12 Or. 431; but see 16 Ga. 479; 43 Me. 535; but not a travelling trunk or a breastpin; 83 N. H. 845; and under the revenue laws shoes are not included; 37 Fed. Rep. 782. See BAGGAGE.

WEATHER BUREAU. Predictions of the weather bureau are not to be given the character of established facts, the failure to observe which shall constitute negligence in any of the business relations of life. The science of forecasting the weather has not reached the degree of exactness which will justify the court in saying that men in their every day avocations are bound to take notice of and be guided by its local forecasts, and that it is negligence not to observe them. The case is different where storms are of great violence and extent such as frequently occur on our Atlantic coast, and where information of their existence, course, and the probable time at which they will reach designated points is given by telegraphic communication and by storm signals. 104 Fed. 903.

WED. A covenant or agreement: thus, a wedded husband.

WEEDS. Weed is defined as "any one of those herbaceous plants which are useless and without special beauty, or especially which are positively troublesome. The application of this general term is somewhat relative. Handsome but pernicious plants, as the ox-eye daisy, corn flower, and the purple cow-wheat of Europe, are weeds to the agriculturist, flowers to the aesthetic. There are also plants that are cultivated for use or beauty, as grasses, hemp, carrot, parsnip, morning-glory, which become weeds when they spring up where they are not wanted. The exotics of cool countries are sometimes weeds in the tropics. 30 An. & Eng. Encyc. 2nd ed., 446; 179 Mo. 13, quoting Cent. Dict. In this case a city ordinance prohibited lot owners from allowing weeds on their lots to the height of over one foot, and defined weed as follows: "The word weeds, as used herein shall be held up to include all rank vegetable growth which exhale unpleasant and noxious odors, and also high and rank vegetable growth that may conceal filthy deposits." It was held that weeds in this sense meant weeds as they were commonly known to mankind and to lexicographers. Id.; ibid.

WEEK. Seven days of time.

The week commences immediately after twelve o'clock on the night between Saturday and Sunday, and ends at twelve o'clock, seven days of twenty-four hours each, thereafter. See 4 Pet. 361; 24 L. J. Ch. 888; or it may mean a period of time of seven days duration without reference to when that period commences; 5 Nev. 480.

The first publication of a notice of a sale, under a power contained in a mortgage, which requires the notice to be published "once each week for three successive weeks," need not be made three weeks before the time appointed for the sale; 117 Mass. 460. See 4 Pet. 361; TIME.

WEEKLY PAYMENT LAWS. See LIBERTY OF CONTRACT.

WEIGHAGE. In English Law. A duty or toll paid for weighing merchandise: it is called tronaige for weighing wool at the king's beam, or pesage for weighing other avoirdupois goods. 3 Chitty, Com. Law 16.

WEIGHT. A quality in natural bodies by which they tend towards the centre of the earth.

Under the police power, weights and measures may be established and dealers compelled to conform to the fixed standards under a penalty; Cooley, Const. Lim. 749.

Under the article Measure, it is said that by the constitution congress possesses the power "to fix the standard of weights and measures," and that this power has not been exercised.

The weights now generally used in the United States are the same as those of England; they are of two kinds.

AVOIRDUPOIS WEIGHT.

First, used in almost all commercial transactions, and in the common dealings of life.

60 grains = 1 dram.
8 drams = 1 ounce.
16 ounces = 1 pound (lb.).
25 or 32 pounds = 1 quarter (qr.).
4 quarters = 1 hundredweight (cwt.).
20 hundredweight = 1 ton.

Second, used for meat and fish.

8 pounds = 1 stone.

Third, used in the wood-trade.

7 pounds = 1 clove.	Cwt. gr. lb.
14 pounds = 1 stone.	= 0 0 14
2 stones = 1 tod.	= 0 1 0
64 tods = 1 wey.	= 1 2 14
2 weys = 1 sack.	= 3 1 0
12 sacks = 1 last.	= 39 0 0

Fourth, used for butter and cheese.

8 pounds = 1 clove.
56 pounds = 1 firkin.

TROY WEIGHT.

24 grains = 1 pennyweight.
12 ounces = 1 pound.

These are the denominations of troy weight when used for weighing gold, silver, and precious stones, except diamonds. Troy weight is also used by apothecaries in compounding medicines; but by them the ounce is divided into eight drams, and the dram into three scruples, so that the latter is equal to twenty grains. For scientific purposes (when the metric system is not employed, as it now usually is), the grain only is used, and sets of weights are used constructed in decimal progression from 10,000 grains downward to one-hundredth of a grain. The carat used for weighing diamonds is three and one-sixth grains. See GRAMME.

A short account of the French weights and measures is given under the article MEASURE.

WEIGHT OF EVIDENCE. This phrase is used to signify that the proof on one side of a cause is greater than on the other.

When a verdict has been rendered against the weight of the evidence, the court may, on this ground, grant a new trial; but the court will exercise this power not merely with a cautious but a strict and sure judgment, before they send the case to a second jury.

The general rule, under such circumstances, is that the verdict once found shall stand: the setting aside is the exception, and ought to be an exception of rare and almost singular occurrence. A new trial will be granted on this ground for either party: the evidence, however, is not to be weighed in golden scales: 2 Bingh. N. C. 109; 3 Me. 276; 8 Pick. 122; 5 Wend. 595. See NEW TRIAL.

WELL. A hole dug in the earth in order to obtain water.

In a deed, well designates the portion of land under and occupied by the excavation, and its surrounding retaining walls, and by any structures or appliances built upon the land to facilitate its use, and also the water actually at any time in the excavation; 157 Mass. 431.

The owner of the estate has a right to dig in his own ground at such a distance as is permitted by law from his neighbor's land; he is not restricted as to the size or depth, and is not liable to any action for rendering the well of his neighbor useless by so doing. See 74 Me. 170; 62 Ga. 290; SUBTERRANEAN WATERS.

WELL KNOWING. In Pleading. Words used in a declaration when the plaintiff sues for an injury which is not immediate and with force, and the act or nonfeasance complained of was not prima facie actionable. Not only the injury, but the circumstances under which it was committed, ought to be stated: as, where the injury was done by an animal. In such case the plaintiff, after stating the injury, continues, the defendant, well knowing the mischievous propensity of his dog, permitted him to go at large. See SCIENTER.

WELSH MORTGAGE. In English Law. A species of security which partakes of the nature of a mortgage, as there is a debt due, and an estate is given as security for the repayment, but differs from it in the circumstances that the rents and profits are to be received without account till the principal money is paid off, and there is no remedy to enforce payment, while the mortgagor has a perpetual power of redemption. It is now rarely used.

It is a species of vivum vadium. Strictly, however, there is this distinction between a Welsh mortgage and a vivum vadium: in the latter the rents and profits of the estate are applied to the discharge of the principal after paying the interest; while in the former the rents and profits are received in satisfaction of his interest only; 1 Powell, Mortg. 373 a; Jones, Mtg. 1153. See MORTGAGE.

WELSHING. One who receives a sum of money or valuable thing, undertaking to return the same or the value thereof together with other money, if an event (for example, the result of a horse-race) shall be determined in a certain manner and at the time of receiving the deposit intends to cheat and defraud the depositor. Coldr. & Hawks. Gambling 303. The crime is larceny at common law.

WELSHING. See WELSHER.

WEOTUMA. In the primitive form of marriage among the Anglo-Saxons, weotuma was the name of the price given by the bridegroom to the parents or guardians of the bride for the transfer of the rights of protection (or "mund") of the bride to the bridegroom. 2 Holdas. Hist. E. L. 3rd ed., 88. See MORNING GIFT.

WERE. The name of a fine among the Saxons imposed upon a murderer.

The life of every man, not excepting that of the king himself, was estimated at a certain price, which was called the were or estimatio capitis. The amount varied according to the dignity of the person murdered. The price of wounds was also varied according to the nature of the wound, or the member injured.

WERGILD, WERE GILD. In Old English Law. The price which, in a barbarous age, a person guilty of homicide or other enormous offence was required to pay, instead of receiving other punishment. 4 Bla. Com. 188.

See, for the etymology of this word, and a tariff which was paid for the murder of the different classes of men, Guizot, Essai sur l'Histoire de France, Essai 4ème, c. 2, § 2.

WEST SAXON LAKE. The law of the West Saxons, which was observed in the counties in the south and west of England, from Kent to Devonshire, in the beginning of the eleventh century; supposed by Blackstone to have been much the same as the laws of Alfred. 1 Bla. Com. 65.

WEST VIRGINIA. The name of one of the United States of America.

This state was formed in 1861 of the western counties of Virginia, owing to their non-concurrence in the ordinance of secession passed by the legislature of that state. A constitution was framed by a convention which met at Wheeling on November 20, 1861. This was submitted to the people on April 8, 1862, and ratified almost unanimously. The consent of the body, recognized by the federal government as the legislature of Virginia, was given, and congress then passed an act approved December 31, 1862, providing for the admission of the new state into the Union upon condition of the adoption of an amendment to the constitution providing for emancipation of slaves. This was done, and the state was admitted to the Union. The first constitution remained in force until 1872, when the present constitution was framed by a convention which met on January 16, 1872, and completed its labors on April 9 of that year. It was submitted to the people and ratified by them on August 22, 1872.

WESTERN RESERVE. See OHIO.

WESTMINSTER THE FIRST, STATUTE OF. This is the name of the fifty-one chapters (each corresponding to what is now called an Act of Parliament) passed in 1275. Byrnes.

WESTMINSTER 2nd, STATUTE OF. A statute of 13 Edw. I. c. 24 (1285), under which it was provided that where in one case a writ was found and in a like case no writ was to be found, the clerks of the chancery should agree in making a writ, or adjourn the complaint until the next parliament and refer to it the cases in which they could not agree; Steph. Pl. *7. See CONSILIUM CASU.

WETHER. A castrated ram, at least one year old: in an indictment it may be called a sheep. 4 C. & P. 216.

WHALER. A vessel employed in the whale fishery.

It is usual for the owner of the vessel, the captain, and crew, to divide the profits in just proportions, under an agreement similar to the contract Di Colona, which see.

WHARF. A space of ground artificially prepared for the reception of merchandise from a ship or vessel, so as to promote the convenient loading and discharge of such vessel.

A wharf occupied by a ferry company, to which access can only be had through a gate controlled by the ferry company, or over private property of another, is a private wharf; 78 Hun 166; but a public quay in a city, dedicated to public use, does not cease to be locus publicus and become private property because it is leased by the public authorities for a purpose subservient to the public use; 140 U. S. 654.

At common law, the soil of all tide-waters below high-water mark being vested in the crown, the erection of a wharf thereon without the consent of the crown is an encroachment upon the royal domain of that kind which has been denominated a purpresture, and, as such, may be either abated, or, if more beneficial to the crown, the party arrested, unless it be a public nuisance; 10 Price 350, 378; 18 Ves. 214; 2 Story, Eq. Jur. § 920. But if it obstruct navigation to such a degree as to be a public nuisance, neither the crown nor its grantee has authority to erect or maintain it without the sanction of an act of parliament; 8 Ad. & E. 336; 5 M. & W. 327; Phear, Rights of Water 54. It is not every wharf erected in navigable water which is a nuisance, for it may be a benefit rather than an injury to the navigation: and it is for the jury to determine, in each particular case, whether such a wharf is a nuisance or not; 1 C. & M. 496; 4 Ad. & E. 384; 9 Id. 143; 15 Q. B. 276.

A riparian owner has, at common law, a qualified interest in the water frontage belonging by nature to his land, and the right to construct thereon wharves, piers, or landings; 107 N. C. 189. But this certainly can only be by consent of the authorities, and so as not to interrupt navigation unduly.

In this country, the several states, being the owners of the soil of the tide waters within their respective territories, may by law authorize and regulate the erection of wharves thereon, at least until the general government shall have legislated upon the subject; 4 Ga. 26; 7 Cush. 53; 2 H. &

M'H. 244; 11 Gill & J. 351; and may grant to a municipal corporation the exclusive right to make and control wharves on the banks of a navigable river; 95 U. S. 80. The riparian proprietor is entitled to make a landing, wharf, or pier for his own use or for the use of the public, subject to such general rules and regulations as the legislature may prescribe; 146 U. S. 445; 10 Wall. 504. In Massachusetts and Maine, by a colonial ordinance, the provisions of which are still recognized as the law of those states, the property of the shores and flats between high and low water mark, for one hundred rods, subject to the rights of the public, was transferred to the owners of the upland, who may, therefore, wharf out to that distance, if by so doing they do not unreasonably interrupt navigation; 1 Cush. 813, 395; 36 Me. 16; 42 id. 9. If without legislative sanction they extend a wharf beyond that distance, such extension is prima facie a nuisance, and will be abated as such, unless it can be shown that it is no material detriment to navigation; 20 Pick. 186; 10 R. I. 477. In Connecticut, and probably in other states, by the law of the state founded upon immemorial usage, the proprietor of the upland has the right to wharf out to the channel,—subject to the rights of the public; 9 Conn. 38; 25 id. 345; 10 Pet. 369; 1 Dutch. 325; 6 Ind. 233; 62 Conn. 132; 23 Minn. 18; 55 Fed. Rep. 534. In Pennsylvania, the riparian proprietor is held to be the owner of the soil between high and low water mark, and to be entitled to erect wharves thereon; 1 Whart. 131; 2 id. 539; but not without express authority from the state; 61 Pa. 21. In the same state it has been held that wharves are not the private property of him who erects them, and persons who go upon and fasten vessels to them are not trespassers; 39 Leg. Int. 32; and that in an action for the use and occupation of a wharf, a contract express or implied must be proved; 28 Am. L. Reg. 145.

The owner of a wharf is liable for damages caused to a vessel by concealed obstructions which he might have ascertained by reasonable diligence; 37 Fed. Rep. 160; see 36 id. 927; and such claims are within the jurisdiction of admiralty; and a libel in personam will lie; 45 Fed. Rep. 588. The wharfinger was also held liable for damages to vessels caused by the insufficiency of the wharf; 79 Fed. Rep. 113.

Owners of land abutting on a lake, the title to which is in the state, have the right to build wharves in aid of navigation, but not obstructing it, far enough to reach water navigable for such boats as are in use; 40 L. R. A. (Wis.) 635. See an extended note to this case on the right of the riparian owner to erect wharves, where the English and American cases are collected and classified.

See, generally, 2 Sandf. 258; 3 How. 212; 1 Gill & J. 249; 11 id. 351; 8 Term 606; RIPARIAN PROPRIETORS; WATER-COURSE; RIVERS.

WHARFAGE. The money paid for landing goods upon, or loading them from, a wharf. Dane, Abr. Index; 4 Cal. 41.

Wharfingers in London are not entitled to wharfage for goods unloaded into lighters out of barges fastened to their wharves; 3 Burr. 1409; 1 W. Bl. 243. And see 5 Sandf. 48. It has been held that, owing to the interest which the public have in the matter, rates of wharfage may be regulated by statute; 11 Ala. N. S. 586. And see 5 Hill 71; 2 Rich. 370; 8 B. & C. 42; 2 Mann. & R. 107.

Claims for wharfage are cognizable in admiralty, and, if the vessel is a foreign one or from another state, the claim of the wharfinger is a maritime lien against the vessel, which may be enforced by a proceeding in rem, or by a libel in personam against the owner of such vessel; 95 U. S. 18; 56 Fed. Rep. 609. A state statute conferring a remedy for such claims by proceedings in rem is void; 43 N. Y. 554. But as to domestic vessels, the lien of the wharfinger is only enforceable as a common-law lien; 1 Newb. 553; 9 Phila. 364. See 60 Fed. Rep. 766. In the absence of any agreement between the parties, reasonable wharfage will be allowed; 95 U. S. 68. A lease giving the lessee "the sole and exclusive right to use the public wharf for his ferry boat," does not authorize the collection of toll for wharfage; 1 Newb. 541. A municipal corporation cannot exact a charge upon vessels for entering or leaving a port or remaining therein and using the wharves or landings, for the general revenue of such corporation; 20 Wall. 577; 95 U. S. 80; but it may collect from parties using its wharves, such reasonable fee as will fairly remunerate it for the use of its property; 100 U. S. 423; id. 430; 95 id. 80; 40 Fed. Rep. 392. That such fees are regulated by the tonnage of the vessel will not constitute them a tonnage tax under the constitution, art. 1, paragraph 3, § 10; 20 Gratt. 419. See 9 Fed. Rep. 679; 25 Alb. L. J. 254. A ship compelled by stress of weather to moor to a wharf for safety, is not liable to a charge for wharfage, where the wharf is a private one, and no fixed rate of charge is in use; 42 Fed. Rep. 173. Vessels which have made use of a wharf, whether under express or implied contract, are not entitled to refuse payment of wharfage on the ground that the wharfinger is not the legal owner of the property; 59 Fed. Rep. 628.

WHARFINGER. One who owns or keeps a wharf for the purpose of receiving and shipping merchandise to or from it for hire.

A wharfinger stands in the situation of an ordinary bailee for hire, and therefore, like a warehouseman, he is responsible for ordinary neglect, and is required to take ordinary care of the goods intrusted to him as such; 2 Barb. 328; 4 Ind. 368; 10 Vt. 56; 4 Term 581. The wharfinger is not an insurer of the safety of his dock, but he must use reasonable care to keep it in safe condition, for vessels which he invites to enter it; 127 Mass. 286; 7 Blatch. 290; 15 Wall. 649; Poll. Torts 483; [1891] A. C. 11. He is not, like an innkeeper or carrier, to be considered an insurer unless he superadd the character of carrier to that of wharfinger; 5 Burr. 2825; 12 Johns. 232; 7 Cow. 497; 5 Mo. 97. The responsibility of a wharfinger begins when he acquires and ends when he ceases to have the custody of the goods in that capacity.

When he begins and ceases to have such custody depends, generally, upon the usages of trade and of the business. When goods are delivered at a wharf, and the wharfinger has agreed, expressly or by implication, to take the custody of them, his responsibility commences; but a mere delivery at the wharf, without such assent, does not make him liable; 3 Camp. 414; 6 Cow. 757; 10 Vt. 56; 14 M. & W. 28. When goods are in the wharfinger's possession to be sent on board of a vessel for a voyage, as soon as he delivers the possession and the care of them to the proper officers of the vessel, although they are not actually removed, he is, by the usages of trade, deemed exonerated from any further responsibility; 1 M. & W. 174; 1 Gale 420; 99 Mass. 220. The wharfinger does not, however, discharge his duty by delivering them to one of the crew, but should deliver them to the captain of the vessel, or some other person in authority on board of it; 1 C. & P. 638. And see 2 C. & M. 531; 7 Scott 870; 4 Q. B. 511.

A wharfinger has a general lien upon all goods in his possession for the balance of his account; 4 B. & Ald. 50; 12 Ad. & E. 639; 7 B. & C. 213; 95 U. S. 68; and in respect to the right of lien there is no distinction between the wharfinger and the warehouseman; 23 Am. L. R. Eq. 403, 408. A wharfinger has equally a lien on a vessel for wharfage; Ware 354; Gilp. 101. See WHARFAGE.

WHEEL. The punishment of the wheel was formerly to put a criminal on a wheel, and then to break his bones until he expired. This barbarous punishment was never used in the United States; and it has been abolished in every civilized country.

WHELPS. The young of certain animals of a base nature or feræ naturæ.

It is a rule that when no larceny can be committed of any creatures of a base nature which are feræ naturæ, though tame and reclaimed, it cannot be committed of the young of such creatures in the nest, kennel, or den; Co. 3d Inst. 109; 1 Russ. Cr. 153.

The owner of the land is, however, considered to have a qualified property in such animals, ratione impotentia; 3 Bla. Com. 394.

WHEN. At which time. At that time. 90 Mo. 646.

In wills, standing by itself unqualified and unexplained, this is a word of condition denoting the time at which the gift is to commence; 6 Ves. Jr. 243; 10 Co. 50; 16 C. B. 59.

The context of a will may show that the word is to be applied to the possession only, not to the vesting of a legacy; but to justify this construction there must be circumstances, or other expressions in the will, showing such to have been the testator's intent; 7 Ves. 422; 3 Bro. C. C. 471. See 2 Jar. Wills 417. See DEVISE; TIME.

WHEN AND WHERE. Technical words in pleading, formerly necessary in making full defence to certain actions. See 1 Chit. Pl. *445; DEFENCE.

WHENEVER. Though often used as equivalent to "as soon as," is also often used where the time intended by it is, and will be, until its arrival, or for some uncertain period at least, indeterminate. 14 R. I. 188.

WHEREAS. This word implies a recital, and, in general, cannot be used in the direct and positive averment of a fact in a declaration or plea. Those facts which are directly denied by the terms of the general issue, or which may, by the established usage of pleading, be specially traversed, must be averred in positive and direct terms; but facts, however material, which are not directly denied by the terms of the general issue, though liable to be contested under it, and which, according to the usage of pleading, cannot be specially traversed, may be alleged in the declaration by way of recital, under a whereas; 2 Chitty, Pl. 151, 178, 191.

WHEREUPON. Sequence; succession; order of action; relation. A thing done with reference to something previously done. It is interchangeable with the words upon which, and after which. 1 Wyo. 418.

WHIPPING. The infliction of stripes.

This mode of punishment, which is still practised in several states, has yielded in most of the states to the penitentiary system. It is still used in Maryland for wife-beating, and in Delaware for all felonies (but not for women).

Whipping has been held to be punishment worse than death; 7 Tex. 69; but see 2 Rich. 418. It is not a "cruel or unusual punishment"; 50 Md. 264.

The punishment of whipping, so far as the same was provided by the laws of the United States, was abolished by the act of congress of February 28, 1839, s. 5. See CORRECTION; SEAMEN.

This punishment has never been altogether abolished in England. At common law it was inflicted on inferior persons for petty larceny, etc.; but by the usage of the star chamber, never on a gentleman. By 1 Geo. IV. c. 57, it was abolished as to women. By 5 & 6 Vict. striking or flogging at the queen is punishable with whipping thrice or fewer times. The Criminal Law Consolidation Acts of 1861 authorize the whipping of males below 16 who have been convicted of sending letters threatening to kill; placing explosives near a house, ship, etc.; defiling a girl under 13 years of age; robbing with violence (not over twenty-five stripes); but it must be done in private and only once, and the court must specify the number of strokes and the instrument. By 35 Vict. c. 18, for boys under 14, the number of stripes shall not exceed twelve with a birch rod. For the offences of robbery accompanied with personal violence, and of attempting by any means to strangle or to render inensible any one with intent to enable himself or others to commit an indictable offence, in addition to imprisonment, the 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, and 26 & 27 Vict. c. 96, direct that the offender, if a man, be once, twice, or thrice privately whipped. See Whart. Lex.

It is forbidden by the constitution of South Carolina and Georgia, except that in Georgia convicts can be so punished. It is in use in some penal institutions as a means of discipline. The latter subject has of late years been examined by a commission in connection with the Elmira Reformatory.

WHISKEY. Within the purview of the Food and Drugs Act June 30, 1906 it means the product of sound grain, distilled at a low temperature so as to retain in the distillate the congeneric properties of the grain, which give to the liquor, when matured by aging in charred casks, its desirable potable character.

Neutral spirits, which are distilled at a high temperature, may be made from different materials and do not contain such properties, and which are not rendered potable by aging, although reduced by water to potable strength and from which most of the fusil oil has been removed, are not whiskey nor a like substance with whiskey. 170 Fed. 662-3.

A spirit distilled from corn. 30 Am. & Eng. Encyc. 2nd ed., 516; 21 Mo. 498. It was held that whiskey is a spirituous liquor distilled from corn and vegetables, and is highly intoxicating. Id.; 49 S. W. Rep. 385. The selling of a compound in which whiskey is the predominant ingredient was held to be selling whiskey. Id.; 23 Tex. App. 398.

See BRANDY: INTOXICATING LIQUOR; LIQUOR LAWS.

WHITE BONNET. In Scotch Law. A fictitious bidder at an auction. Where there is no upset price, and the auction is not stated to be without reserve, there is no authority for saying that employment of such person is illegal. Burton, Law of Scotch. 362.

WHITE CAP. One of a band of men who secretly commit lawless acts under the pretense of regulating the morals of a community. English.

WHITE DAMP. See BLACK DAMP.

WHITE PERSON. As used in the naturalization laws, a person of the Caucasian race. 5 Sawy. 155. It does not include a Mongolian; id.; it includes a person nearer white than black or red; 11 Ohio 375. In the legislation of the slave period it referred to a person without admixture of colored blood, whatever the actual complexion might be; 39 Ark. 192. The words white and colored as used in the statutes providing for the maintenance of schools are held to be used in the ordinary acceptance; 9 Ohio St. 407.

"Free white persons," as used in section 2169 Rev. Stat. are words of common speech, to be interpreted in accordance with the understanding of the common man, synonymous with the word "Caucasian" only as that word is popularly understood. 261 U. S. 214; 260 U. S. 178.

WHITE RENTS. In English Law. Rents paid in silver, and called white rents, or redditus albi, to distinguish them from other rents which were not paid in money. Co. 2d Inst. 19. See ALBA FIRMA.

WHITE SLAVERY. Systematic enticement to and the enslavement in prostitution and debauchery of women, and more insistently of girls. 227 U. S. 308.

WHITEFRIARS. See PRIVILEGED PLACES.

WHOLE BLOOD. Being related by both the father and mother's side; this phrase is used in contradistinction to half blood, which is relation only on one side. See BLOOD.

WHOLESALE. To sell by wholesale is to sell by large parcels, generally in original packages, and not by retail.

WHOLESALE PRICE. The price fixed on merchandise by one who buys in large quantities of the producer or manufacturer, and who sells the same to jobbers or to retail dealers therein. 88 Ia. 169.

WIDOW. An unmarried woman whose husband is dead.

In legal writings, widow is an addition given to a woman who is unmarried and whose husband is dead. A widow who has married again cannot be a widow; 20 Q. B. D. 103. A woman surviving a man to whom she has been married, but with regard to whom she had obtained a declaration of nullity of marriage, is not a widow; 53 L. J. Ch. 239. The addition of spinster is given to a woman who never was married. Lovelace, Wills 269. See ADDITION. As to the rights of a widow, see DOWER; QUARANTINE.

WIDOW'S BENCH. The share of her husband's estate which a widow is allowed besides her jointure. Whart. Lex.

WIDOW'S CHAMBER. In London, the apparel of a widow and the furniture of her chamber, left by her deceased husband, is so called, and the widow is entitled to it. 2 Bla. Com. 518.

WIDOWER. A man whose wife is dead. A widower has a right to administer to his wife's separate estate, and, as her administrator, to collect debts due to her, generally, at common law, for his own use.

WIDOWHOOD. The state of a man whose wife is dead, or of a woman whose husband is dead. In general, there is no law to regulate the time during which a man must remain a widower, or a woman a widow, before they marry a second time. The term widowhood is mostly applied to the state or condition of a widow.

WIFE. A woman united to a man by marriage. See MARRIED WOMAN; HUSBAND AND WIFE.

WIFE'S EQUITY. The equitable right of a wife to have settled upon her and her children a suitable provision out of her estate whenever the husband cannot obtain it without the aid of a court of equity. Shelf. Marr. & D. 605.

By the marriage the husband acquires an interest in the property of his wife, in consideration of the obligation which he contracts by the marriage of maintaining her and their children. The common law enforces this duty thus voluntarily assumed by him, by an action, and, therefore, allows him to alien the property to which he is thus entitled jure mariti, or in case of his bankruptcy or insolvency it would vest in his assignee for the benefit of his creditors, and the wife would be left, with her children, entirely destitute, notwithstanding her fortune may have been great. To remedy this evil, courts of equity, in certain cases, give a provision to the wife, which is called the wife's equity.

The principle upon which courts of equity act is, that he who seeks the aid of equity must do equity; and that will be withheld until an adequate settlement has been made; 1 P. Wms. 459. See 5 My. & C. 105.

Where the property is equitable and not recoverable at law, it cannot be obtained without making a settlement upon a wife and children, if one be required by her; 2 P. Wms. 639; and where, though the property be legal in its nature, it becomes from collateral circumstances the subject of a suit in equity, the wife's right to a settlement will attach; 5 My. & C. 97. See 5 Madd. 149; 18 Me. 124; 9 Watts 90; 5

Johns. Ch. 464; 2 Bland. Ch. 545.

The wife's equity to a settlement is binding not only upon the husband, but upon his assignee, under the bankrupt or insolvent laws; 3 Ves. 607; 6 Johns. Ch. 25; 4 Metc. 486; 4 Gill & J. 268; 5 T. B. Monr. 336; 10 Ala. n. s. 401; 1 Ga. 637. And even where the husband assigned the wife's equitable right for a valuable consideration, the assignee was considered liable; 4 Ves. 19. When the property of the husband is settled upon his wife and children, the settlement will be valid against subsequent creditors if at the time of the settlement being made he was not indebted; 8 Wheat. 229; 4 Mas. 443; 21 N. H. 84; 28 Miss. 717; 25 Conn. 134; but if he was then indebted it will be void as to the creditors existing at the time of the settlement; 3 Johns. Ch. 481; 5 Md. 68; 13 B. Monr. 490; 8 Wheat. 229; unless in cases where the husband received a fair consideration in value for the thing settled, so as to repel the presumption of fraud; 10 Ves. 139; 6 Ind. 121; 28 Ala. n. s. 439; 7 Pick. 533.

As to the amount of the rights of the wife, the general rule is that one-half of the wife's property shall be settled upon her; 3 Atk. 423; 3 Ves. Ch. 166. But it is in the discretion of the court to give her an adequate settlement for herself and children; 5 Johns. Ch. 464; 6 Md. 25; 3 Cow. 591; 1 Des. Eq. 263; 2 Bland. Ch. 546; 1 Cox N. J. 153; 5 B. Monr. 31; 8 Ga. 193; 9 S. & S. 597.

Whenever the wife insists upon her equity, the right will be extended to her children; but the right is strictly personal to the wife, and her children cannot insist upon it after her death; 2 Ed. Ch. 387; 1 J. & W. 472; 1 Madd. 467; 11 Bligh n. s. 104; 2 Johns. Ch. 206; 3 Cow. 591; 10 Ala. n. s. 401.

The wife's equity will be barred by an adequate settlement having been made upon her; 2 Ves. Ch. 675; by living in adultery apart from her husband; 4 Ves. Ch. 146; but a female ward of court, married without its consent, will not be barred although she should be living in adultery; 1 Ves. & B. Ch. 802.

WIGGLESWORTH'S TABLES. Life tables framed by a Dr. Wigglesworth, from observations made in New England. Anderson. See LIFE TABLES, CARLISLE TABLES, NORTHAMPTON TABLES.

WILD ANIMALS. Animals in a state of nature; animals feræ naturæ. See WELFARE; ANIMALS; FERÆ NATURÆ.

WILDCAT COMPANY. A "wildcat company" is understood to mean an irresponsible predatory concern. 141 Ky. 582, 133 S. W. 575.

WILFUL. The voluntary act of a party, as distinguished from coercion. 76 S. W. 185. Intentional, not accidental. 62 S. W. 877.

In an instruction for murder means intentional, not accidental. 112 S. W. 660.

The word "wilful" need not be used in the accusatory proof in an indictment for murder. 9 S. W. 707.

"Wilful" is not to be taken as synonymous with "gross," a word which applied to negligence, has a well-defined legal meaning. 11 Bush (Ky.) 381.

WILFUL NEGLECT. "Wilful neglect" is intentional neglect or such recklessness as evidences a purpose to injure. * * * It is a higher degree of neglect than "gross neglect," and was unknown to the common law. 4 J. J. Mar. (Ky.) 866.

"Wilful neglect" and "wanton neglect" are nearly synonymous—each implying either actual or anti-social recklessness. 2 Duvall (Ky.) 576.

"Gross negligence" is not necessarily the same with "wilful neglect." 11 Bush (Ky.) 380.

WILFUL NEGLIGENCE. "Wilful negligence" is equivalent to intentional wrong, or a recklessness evidencing the absence of all care and precaution for the safety and protection of others. It is quasi-criminal. 9 Bush (Ky.) 523.

WILFULLY. Intentionally.

In charging certain offences, it is required that they should be stated to be wilfully done. Archb. Cr. Pl. 51, 53; Leach 558. In an indictment charging a wilful killing, it means intentionally and not by accident; 116 Mo. 96.

It is distinguished from maliciously in not implying an evil mind; L. R. 2 Cr. Cas. Res. 161.

It implies that the act is done knowingly and of stubborn purpose, but not with malice; 97 N. C. 465; and in penal statutes, it means with evil intent, or with legal malice; 99 Cal. 268; or with a bad purpose; 20 Mass. 220, quoted in 155 U. S. 446. It is frequently understood as signifying an evil intent without justifiable excuse; 1 Bish. Cr. Law 428.

In Pennsylvania it has been decided that the word maliciously was an equivalent for the word wilfully, in an indictment for arson. 5 Whart. 427. When applied to violation of a law means purposely or obstinately, and describes the attitude of one who, having a free will or choice, either intentionally disregards the statute or is plainly indifferent to its requirements. 194 Fed. 346, citing 169 Fed. 69 et al. See MENS REA.

WILL. The disposition of one's property, to take effect after death. Swinb. Wills pt. 1, § 2; Godolphin pt. 1, c. 1, s. 2.

The term will, as an expression of the final disposition of one's property, is confined to the English laws and those countries which derive their jurisprudence from the same source. The term testamentum, or testament, is exclusively used in the Roman civil law and by the continental writers upon that subject. Some controversy seems to exist whether the word testamentum is strictly derived from testamentum or from that in combination with mentis. There does not seem to be much point in this controversy, for, in either view, the result is the same. It is a final declaration of the person in regard to the disposition of his property. It is his testimony upon that subject, and that is the expression of his mind and will in relation to it.

The practice of allowing the owner of property to direct its destination after his death is of very ancient date. (Genesius, op. cit. 22.) Cal. Civ. Code, § 115; Plutarch's Life of Solon; Roman Laws of the Twelve Tables. But wills are not like succession, a law of nature. A stage where they are not recognized always, in every society, precedes the time when they are allowed. In their early growth they were not regarded as a method of distributing a dead man's goods, but as a means of transferring the power and authority of a family to a new chief. It is not until the latter portion of the middle ages that they become a mode of diverting property from the family or of distributing it according to the fancy of the owner. Maine, Anc. L. 317. Nor is the power to dispose of property by will a constitutional right. It depends almost wholly upon statute; 100 Mass. 234. See Tax.

The right of disposing of property by will did not exist in early times. Among the ancient Germans, or with the Spartans under the laws of Lycurgus, or the Athenians before the time of Solon. 4 Kent 502, and note.

And in England, until comparatively a recent period, this right was to be exercised under considerable restrictions, even as to personal estate. 2 Bla. Com. 402.

Until the statute of 32 & 34 Henry VIII., called the statute of wills, the wife and children were each entitled to claim of the executor their reasonable portion of the testator's goods, i. e. each one-third part. So that if one had both a wife and children, he could only dispose of one-third of his personal estate, and if he had either a wife or child, but not both, he could dispose of one-half; Fitzh. N. B. 122 H (b), 9th ed.; 2 Saund. 66, n. (9); 2 Bla. Com. 402. All restrictions are now removed from the disposition of property by will, in England, whether real or personal, by the statute of 11 & 12 Vict. c. 37, § 3 (Randolph & Talcott's ed.) 731. As to the history of the English will, see 11 Harv. L. Rev. 69. And in the Roman civil law the children were always entitled to their share, or legitimate, being one-fourth part of the estate, of which they could not be deprived by the will of their father. The legitimate was by the emperor Justinian increased to one-third part of the estate where there were four or a less number of children, and if more than four then they might claim one-half the estate, notwithstanding the will. 18, c. 1; 2 Domat, Civil Law 15. See Legittime.

And by the existing law of the state of Louisiana, one is restrained of disposing of his whole estate if he have children. One child may claim one-third of the estate, two may claim half, and three two-thirds, as the executor's reasonable part of the estate. See Louisiana Code.

According to the civil law the naming of an executor was of the essence of a will; and that constituted the essential difference between a will and a codicil; the latter, not making any such appointment (absque executoris constitutione), was on that account, called an unsolemn last will. Swinb. Wills 29. The executor under a Roman will succeeded to the entire legal position of the deceased.

He continued the legal personality of the testator, taking all the property as his own, and becoming liable for all the obligations. Maine, Anc. Law 126.

In the United States the homestead laws in some states affect the validity of wills by making void a husband's devise of homestead land; 8 Jarm. Wills (Randolph & Talcott's ed.) 740. See same citation for regulations in various states as to devises to corporations, or for charitable purposes.

A testator, by his will, may make any disposition of his property not inconsistent with the laws or contrary to the policy of the state; 77 Ga. 638; 84 Ala. 48.

An instrument testamentary in form, which contains no disposition of property, is no will and should not be admitted to probate. So held of a writing merely making a declaration of legitimacy of two children, and revoking all previous testamentary dispositions; 5 Ohio Leg. News 505; and a letter to an undertaker authorizing the cremation of the writer's body, and saying, "My brother will be sole administrator and take charge of the estate," was held not to appoint an executor, or make a devise, or be entitled to probate; 118 Cal. 428.

Wills are unwritten or nuncupative, and written. See NUCUPATIVE WILL.

A will may be written in pencil. But it is a strong indication that the will so written was not a final act, but merely a deliberative one. This indication may, however, be overcome by proof; 84 Pa. 510; 1 Hagg. 219; 3 Moo. P. C. 223; 23 Beav. 195. It was held in Pennsylvania that writing on a slate is insufficient; 11 Phila. 541; but in a note to the citation of this case a quære is suggested whether a slate and pencil might not be used in an extreme case; Schoul. Wills § 258, note.

One may bind himself to dispose of his property in a certain way, and such contract will, in a proper case, be specifically enforced; but if it respects realty it must be in writing under the statute of frauds; 90 Va. 728. Where a will was executed by the testator in extremis upon the assurance of one of three residuary legatees that a bequest intended by the testator to be made, but omitted from the will, should be executed as if made; it was held that the share of the legatee making the promise should contribute its ratable proportion of the omitted bequest, and the question whether such a promise by one of a class of legatees or devisees was binding on the others was left undecided; 37 Atl. Rep. (N. J.) 735.

THE TESTATOR'S CAPACITY. He must be of the age of discretion, which, by the common law of England, was fixed at twelve in females, and fourteen in males; Swinburne, pt. 2, § 2, pl. 6; Godolphin, pt. 1, c. 8, § 1; 1 Will. Ex. 13; 1 Jarm. Wills 29.

This is now regulated by statute, both in England and most of the United States. The period of competency to execute a will, in England, is fixed at twenty-one years, and the same rule is adopted in many of the United States, and the disposition is strongly manifested in that direction throughout the states; 3 Jarm. Wills (Randolph & Talcott's ed.) 748, note.

"Sound mind and memory," which constitute testamentary capacity, may be properly described as that condition which would render the testator capable of transacting the ordinary business of life; 126 Ill. 507.

Though a will be dictated by testator when entirely competent, it is none the less invalid if executed by him at a time when he was not of sound and disposing mind; 19 D. C. 493.

Aliens. By the common law in England, an alien could not devise or take by devise, real estate; and an alien enemy could not devise personally until 38 Vict. c. 14, § 2. This rule is now, in the United States, much altered by statute; 1 Redf. Wills 8-14; 3 Jarm. Wills (Randolph & Talcott's ed.) 743, note. Indians, in the absence of statute on the subject, are governed by the same law as resident aliens; p. 745 of last citation. See same citation as to convicts, for whom the regulations are mostly statutory. Coveture was a disability in the execution of a will, unless by the consent of the husband; 2 Bla. Com. 498; 4 Kent 505; 1 Will. Ex. 42. But a married woman could not, even with her husband's consent, devise land, because she would thereby exclude her heir; otherwise with chattels; 12 Mass. 525; 16 N. H. 194; 10 S. & R. 445; 15 N. J. Eq. 384. In the United States the disability as to coveture has been largely changed by statute; 1 Redf. Wills 22-29; 3 Jarm. Wills (Randolph & Talcott's ed.) 752, note. Blindness is so far an incapacity that it requires express and satisfactory proof that the testator understood the contents of the will, in addition to what is required in other cases; 1 Rob. Eccl. 278; 3 Strobb. 297; 1 Jarm. Wills 49. Deaf and dumb persons will labor under a similar inconvenience, and especially in communicating with the witnesses, unless they have been educated so as to be able to write; Whart. & St. Med. Jur. § 13. But the witnesses must, to be present with the testator, be within the possible cognizance of his remaining senses; Richardson, J., in 1 Spears 256. Persons deaf, dumb, and blind were formerly esteemed wholly incapable of making a will; but that class of persons are now placed upon the same basis as the two former, with only the additional embarrassment attending the defect of another sense; 1 Will. Ex. 17, 18; 1 Redf. Wills 53. A speechless paralytic, who retained his interest in and knowledge of the details of his business, and whose mind was unimpaired up to the time of his death, was held capable of making a will where his wishes as to the disposition of his property were communicated by negative and affirmative replies to questions asked him, and, after it had been written, it was read to him item by item, and his assent given by nods of his head; 22 Ore. 551.

Idiots are wholly incapable of executing a will, whether the defect of the understanding is congenital or accidental. Lunatics are incapable of executing a last will and testament, except during such a lucid interval as allows the exercise of memory and judgment. It must be an absolute, but not necessarily a perfect, restoration, to reason and reflection, and not a mere temporary remission; Tayl. Med. Jur. 642; 3 Bro. C. C. 441; 3 Ad. Eccl. 79; Pothier, Obli. Evans ed. Att. 579; Whart. & St. Med. Jur. § 255; Rush, Mind 162; Ray, Med. Jur. § 279; Combe, Ment. Der. 241; 9 Ves. Ch. 611; 18 id. 87; 12 Am. L. Reg. 385; 1 Phila. 90; 81 N. J. Eq. 638; 94 Ill. 580; 26 Wend. 255; 1 Redfield on Wills 107, 120. But mere weakness of understanding is not sufficient to invalidate a will, if the testator is capable of comprehending the object in view; 17 Ark. 292; 2 Bradf. 42; 2 J. J. Marsh. 340; 10 S. & R. 34. Nor as a matter of law is a testator of unsound mind, if he mistakenly believed that his relatives had mistreated him, and therefore made no provision for them in his will; 94 Cal. 406. See 87 Hun 408; 37 W. Va. 88.

When a testator has the legal capacity to make a will he has the legal right to make an unequal, unjust, or unreasonable will; 29 W. Va. 784; 32 id. 119; 84 Ala. 53. The fact that a will is unreasonable is not enough to render it invalid; 96 Cal. 449; but it tends to prove invalidity; 63 Conn. 385.

A belief in spiritualism does not constitute incapacity to make a will; 53 Md. 876; 96 Cal. 448; 161 Ill. 114; see 31 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 569; especially if the views held thereon had nothing to do with making the will; id.; nor moral insanity; 23 N. Y. S. 109; nor delusions, except so far as they concern the person to whom they relate; 62 Wis. 216; 20 Oreg. 239; see 121 N. Y. 406 (unless they are insane delusions; 53 Md. 376); nor partial unsoundness; L. R. 5 Q. B. 549; 62 Barb. 250; nor does incapacity to manage one's ordinary affairs; 136 Mass. 145; nor advanced age, nor enfeebled condition; 73 N. Y. 269; nor failure of memory alone; unless it be total or extend to the members of his family or property; 4 Kent 510; if the testator comprehends the nature and extent of his property and the nature of the claims of those he is excluding, he is competent; 71 Mo. 533; L. R. 3 Q. B. 549; 5 N. Y. Surr. 304; 3 Redf. 384; 75 Ill. 280; L. R. 3 P. & D. 64; 21 Vt. 168; 37 W. Va. 38; 85 Va. 546; 50 N. J. Eq. 428, 439; 88 Mich. 587; 162 Pa. 567; 114 Mo. 35; 134 Ind. 437; 94 Cal. 406. The nature and character of the will are generally irrelevant; 28 Barb. 638; 39 N. Y. 153; though unreasonable or unnatural provisions are evidence of mental defect; 104 Pa. 199; 105 Ind. 456; 126 N. Y. 423.

A finding that a testator was insane at any time prior to the making of the will does not support a presumption that the insanity continued to the making of the will, unless it is also found that the insanity is habitual and fixed; 97 Ala. 731; 65 Vt. 370. When it appears that the will is the direct offspring of monomania it should be held invalid, notwithstanding the general soundness of the testator; 6 Ga. 324; 7 Gill 10; 8 Watts 70. See, also, 3 Moore, P. C. 841, 849; 12 Jurist 947, where Lord Brougham contends for the extreme notion that every person laboring under any form of partial insanity or monomania is incompetent to execute a valid will, because the mind being one and entire, if unsound in any part it is an unsound mind. This extreme view will scarcely gain final acceptance in the courts; Whart. & St. Med. Jur. § 18, contra.

As to the burden of proof in contests of wills, on the ground of mental incapacity of the testator, see 36 Cent. Law J. 408; 93 Mich. 234; 129 Ill. 392; 146 id. 337; 110 Mo. 456; 95 Ala. 486.

Delirium from disease or stimulus. This, while the paroxysm continues to such an extent as to deprive a person of the right exercise of reason, is a sufficient impediment to the execution of a will; Ray, Ins. §§ 253, 254, 390; Tayl. Med. Jur. 626; Rush, Mind 282; 18 Ves. Ch. 12; 17 Jur. 1045; 1 Ves. Sen. 19. See, also, 2 Aik. Vt. 167; 1 Bibb 168. But there is not the same presumption of the continuance of this species of mental perversion, whether it proceed from the intoxication of stimulus or the delirium of fever, as in ordinary insanity; 3 Hill, So. C. 68; 4 Metc. Mass. 545. See DELIRIUM FEBRILE; DELIRIUM TREMENS; DRUNKENNESS; DEMENTIA; IDIOT. Fraud. If a person is induced by fraud or undue influence to make a will or legacy, such will or legacy is void; 4 Ves. 802; 6 H. L. Cas. 2; 85 N. Y. 559; 50 Md. 466, 480; 1 Jarm. Wills (5th ed.) 35; 1 Redf. Wills 507-537. See UNDUE INFLUENCE.

THE MODE OF EXECUTION. This depends upon the particular form of the statutory requirements; 3 Jarm. Wills (Randolph & Talcott's ed.) 763, note, et seq.

In New York an attorney may be a witness to the preparation and execution of the will in case he is one of the subscribing witnesses thereto; Laws, 1892, ch. 514.

Under the English statute of frauds, 29 Car. II., as "signing" only was required, it was held that a mark was sufficient; 8 Nev. & P. 228; 8 Ad. & E. 94; 10 Paige, Ch. N. Y. 85. And under the statute of 1 Vict. c. 26, the same form of execution is required so far as signing is concerned. But sealing seems not to be sufficient where signing is required; 1 Wils. 318; 1 Jarm. Wills 69, 70, and cases cited. So, it was immaterial in what part of the will the testator signed. It was sufficient if the instrument began, I, A. B., etc., and was in the handwriting of the testator, and he treated that as signing or did not regard the instrument as incomplete, as it evidently would be so long as he intended to do some further act to authenticate it; 8 Lev. 1; Freem. 538; 1 Eq. Cas. Abr. 408, pl. 9; Prec. in Chanc. 184; 21 Vt. 256. But, if it appear from the form of attestation at the close, or in any other way, that the testator did not regard the instrument as complete, the introduction of the testator's name at the beginning, in his own handwriting, is not a sufficient signing; Dougl. 241; 1 Gratt. 454; 18 id. 664; 10 Paige, Ch. 85. See 7 Q. B. 450. Where the whole of the disposing portion of a will was written on the first side of a sheet of foolscap, the second and third sides being blank, while the attestation clause, with the signatures of the testator and the witnesses, was on the fourth side, the will was held to be duly executed; [1892] Prob. 377. It was not held necessary under the statute of frauds of Charles II. that the witnesses should subscribe in the presence of each other. They might attest the execution at different times; Prec. in Chanc. 184; 1 Ves. Ch. 12; 1 Will. Ex. 79. But the statute 1 Vict. requires both the witnesses to be present when the testator signs the will or acknowledges his signature; and they must afterwards attest in the presence of the testator, although not of each other; 8 Curt. Eccl. 659; 1 Will. Ex. 79, and note; 84 Ala. 53; 64 Md. 138.

In Wisconsin by act of April 3, 1895, it is provided that the signature of the testator made by another shall be attested and subscribed by witnesses in the presence of each other; Laws, 1895, c. 120.

The term "presence" in a statute requiring the subscription of witnesses to a will, to be made in the presence of a testator, means "conscious presence"; 85 Va. 546.

A joint will, executed by two brothers, revocable at the will of either, is valid; 92 Ky. 76.

Olograph wills in general require no attestation; 3 Jarm. Wills (Randolph & Talcott's ed.) 767, note.

The statutes in the different states differ to some extent, but agree substantially with the English statute of Charles II. In Pennsylvania no subscribing witnesses are required except to a will containing a gift to charity. In Louisiana upon the probate of an olographic will the judge is required to interrogate witnesses and make sure that they know the handwriting; Laws, 1896, c. 119. Olographic wills are valid in Nevada; Laws, 1895, c. 111.

The testator must sign before the witnesses subscribe; L. R. 3 P. & D. 97; 39 N. Y. 153. But if the testator acknowledge his signature, so that the witnesses can see it at the time, it is enough; 7 P. D. 102. A will may be signed by another, if done in the testator's presence and at his request, when he cannot write; 58 N. H. 7; or is physically incapacitated; 46 S. C. 299; but see 94 Tenn. 538.

The competency of witnesses and the validity of devices to witnesses, or to the husband or wife of a witness, are questions usually controlled by statute; 3 Jarm. Wills (Randolph & Talcott's ed.) 775, note, et seq.

PUBLICATION. The best-considered cases, under statutes similar to that of Charles II., only require the production of the instrument by the testator for the purpose of being attested by the witnesses, if it bear his signature; 11 Cush. 582; 1 Burr. 421; 3 id. 1775; 4 Burn, Eccl. Law 102 & 6 Bingh. 810; 7 id. 457; 7 Taunt. 361; 1 Cr. & M. 140; 8 Curt. Eccl. 181; 80 Ga. 808; 2 Barb. 385; 46 Ill. 61; 34 Me. 102; 3 Redf. 74; 44 Wisc. 392; 50 N. J. Eq. 742. Where a will or codicil refers to an existing unattested will or other paper, it thereby becomes a part of the will; 2 Ves. Ch. 228; 1 Ad. & E. 423; 1 Will. Ex. 86, and note; 1 Rob. Eccl. 81; but a document referred to in a will, which is not in existence at the time of its execution, does not constitute a part of the will, and is not entitled to probate as such; 74 Cal. 144. Witnesses may attest by a mark; 8 Ves. Ch. 185, 504; 5 Johns. 144; 4 Kent 514, n.; 51 Ark. 48.

REVOCATION. The mode of revocation of a will provided in the statute of frauds, Car. II., is by "burning, cancelling, tearing, or obliterating the same." See 47 Minn. 171. In the present English statute of wills, the terms used are "burning, tearing, or otherwise destroying." If the testator has torn off or effaced his seal and signature at the end of a will, it will be presumed to have been done animo revo- candi; 1 Add. Eccl. 78; 26 N. J. Eq. 501. So, too, where lines were drawn over the name of the testator; 64 Hun 635; 88 Ala. 432. So, also, where the instrument had been cut out from its marginal frame, although not otherwise defaced, except that the attestation clause was cut through, it was held to amount to a revocation; 1 Phill. Eccl. 375, 406.

It is not requisite in order to effect the revocation that the testator should effect the destruction of the instrument. It is sufficient if he threw it upon the fire with the intention of destroying it, although some one snatch it off after it is slightly burned, and preserve it without his knowledge; 2 W. Blackst. 1043. But it would seem that it must be an actual burning or tearing to some extent,—an intention merely to do the acts not coming within the statute; 6 Ad. & E. 209; 2 Nev. & P. 615. See 47 Minn. 171. But, aside from the statute, a mere intention to revoke evidenced by any other act, will be effectual to revoke; as, burning or tearing, etc.; 8 Ad. & E. 1. How much the will must be burned or torn to constitute a revocation under the statute of frauds was left by the remarks of the different judges in Doe v. Harris, 6 Ad. & E. 209, in perplexing uncertainty; 1 Williams, Ex. 121.

If the testator is arrested in his purpose of revocation before he regards it as complete, it will be no revocation, although he tore the will to some extent; 3 B. & Ald. 489.

It is held in England that a letter, duly signed and attested, requesting a third person to destroy the testator's will, is sufficient to revoke it; 2 P. & D. 406.

A will may be revoked in part; 2 Rob. Eccl. 562, 572. But partial revocations which were made in anticipation of making a new will and intended to be conditional upon that, are not regarded as complete until the new will is executed; 1 Add. Eccl. 409; 2 id. 318. See 8 Sim. 73. Thus a "memorandum of my intended will" was upheld as a will, and held not to be revoked by the drawing up of a new will which was not signed; 2 Hagg. Eccl. 225; 14 C. L. J. 248.

Parol evidence is inadmissible to show that a testator wanted his will to be revoked in the event of a certain contingency happening before his death; 13 Rept. (Md.) 523; but see, contra, 3 Sw. & Tr. 282.

By the present English statute, every obliteration or interlineation or alteration of a will is required to be complete so that the words obliterated or their effect are not apparent, and they must be authenticated in the same mode that the execution of the will is required to be. Hence, unless such alterations are signed by the testator, and attested by two witnesses, they are not to be regarded as made, however obvious the intention of the testator may be. But if the words are so obliterated as to be no longer legible, they are treated as blanks in the will; 3 Curt. Eccl. 761.

The mere act of defacing a will by accident and without the intention to revoke, or under the misapprehension that a later will is good, will not operate as a revocation; 1 P. Wms. 845; Cowp. 53; 1 Saund. 279 b, c; 1 Add. Eccl. 53. The revocation of a will is prima facie a revocation of the codicils; 4 Hagg. Eccl. 361. But it is competent to show that such was not the testator's intention; 2 Add. Eccl. 230; 1 Curt. Eccl. 289; 1 Will. Ex. 184. The same capacity is requisite to revoke as to make a will; 7 Dana 94; 11 Wend. 227; 9 Gill 169; 7 Humphr. 92. A testator who is insane cannot revoke an existing will; 65 Cal. 19; [1893] P. 283; 73 Mo. 595; and tearing a will while suffering from delirium tremens is not a revocation; L. R. 3 P. & D. 87.

Revocation induced by fraud or undue influence is not effectual; 73 Me. 595; 68 Md. 208.

The making of a new will purporting on its face to be the testator's last will, and containing no reference to any other paper, and being a disposition of all the testator's property, and so executed as to be operative, will be a revocation of all former wills, notwithstanding it contain no express words of revocation; 2 Curt. Eccl. 468; 18 Jur. 560; 4 Moore, P. C. 29; 2 Dall. 266. So the appointment of an executor is a circumstance indicating the exclusiveness of the instrument; 1 Macq. Hou. L. 103, 173. And the revocation will become operative, notwithstanding the second will becomes inoperative from the incapacity of the devisee; 1 Pick. 535, 543.

It is regarded as the prima facie presumption from the revocation of a later will, a former one being still in existence and uncancelled, that the testator did intend its restoration without any formal republication; 4 Burr. 2512; Cowp. 92; 3 Phill. Eccl. 554; 2 Dall. 266. But it is still regarded as mainly a question of intention to be decided by all the facts and circumstances of the case; 1 How. Miss. 336; 2 Add. Eccl. 125; 3 Curt. Eccl. 770; 1 Moore, P. C. 299, 301; 1 Will. Ex. 155, 156; 2 Dall. 266; 36 Tenn. 173. The revocation of a will by intentionally destroying it will not revive a former will which was expressly revoked by the later one; 72 Tex. 281; and revocation by the mere execution of a subsequent will without a clause of revocation is denied, but it is held that the destruction of the later will revives the former one; 37 L. R. A. (Mich.) 561; 142 Mass. 515, in which case the testator had made three successive wills, intending to choose one of them and then cancelled the first and third; but it will not where the testator intended to make a new one; 86 Tenn. 173. The probability of there having been a revocation can be shown by proving the testator's verbal statements concerning his will; 11 Biss. 256; but a declaration of an intent to make a will at a future time, even when made as a formal recital in a deed, is not a revocation of an earlier will; 110 Pa. 232. Where there has been an act sufficient to constitute a revocation, it would seem that a verbal statement as to the intent of such act would be evidence. See 63 N. H. 485. An express revocation must be made in conformity with the statute, and proved by the same force of evidence requisite to establish the will in the first instance; 8 Bingh. 479; 1 Will. Ex. 160. If one republish a prior will, it amounts to a revocation of all later wills or codicils; 1 Add. Eccl. 38; 7 Term 138. A subsequent will containing a clause revoking former wills is not evidence of revocation until it is admitted to probate; 139 Mass. 164; 138 Id. 116.

When a will, once known to exist, and to have been in the custody of the testator, cannot be found after his decease, the legal presumption is that it was destroyed by the testator with the intention of revoking it; 47 Ohio St. 323; where a will was executed in duplicate and the one retained by testatrix was not forthcoming at her decease, it was held that she was presumed to have destroyed it, animo revocandi; 58 L. T. R. 60.

Implied revocations were very common before the statute of frauds. But since the new statute of 1 Vict. c. 26, § 19, as to all estates real and personal, it is provided that no will shall be revoked on the ground of a presumed intention resulting from change of circumstances. Before that, it was held under the statute of frauds, by a succession of decisions, that, even as to lands, the marriage of the testator and the birth of children who were unprovided for was such a change of circumstances as to work an implied revocation of the will; 2 Show. 242; 4 Burr. 2171, 2182, in note; and, finally, by all the judges in England in the exchequer chamber; 8 Ad. & E. 14; 2 Nev. & P. 504. This latter case seems finally to have prevailed in England until the new statute; 2 Moore, P. C. 51, 63, 64; 2 Curt. Eccl. 854; 1 Rob. Eccl. 680. And the subsequent death of the child or children will not revive the will without republication; 1 Phill. Eccl. 343; 2 Id. 266. See 63 Ia. 124.

The marriage alone or the birth of a child alone is not always sufficient to operate a revocation; 4 Burr. 2171; Ambl. 487, 557, 721; 5 Term 52, and note. The marriage alone of a woman will work a revocation; 4 Rep. 61. See 131 N. Y. 620; 90 Va. 738; 38 Pac. Rep. (Col.) 427. Not so the marriage alone of a man. See statutes providing for revocation of will on the marriage of the testator; Mass. Laws, 1892, ch. 118; Arizona Laws, 1891, ch. 92. But the birth of a child, with circumstances favoring such a result, may amount to an implied revocation; 5 Term 52, and note; 1 Phil. Eccl. 147. See 50 Fed. Rep. 310; 63 Ia. 124. A will not made in contemplation of matrimony is revoked by the marriage of the testator and the birth of a posthumous child; 31 Fla. 139; 70 Ga. 464. For the history of the common law on this subject, see 4 Johns. Ch. 510 et seq. In the absence of statute this rule of the common law may be considered abrogated in those states which give a married woman unrestricted testamentary powers. This matter is controlled in most of the American states, more or less, by statute; 3 Jarm. Wills (Randolph & Talcott's ed.) 783, note. In many of them a posthumous child unprovided for in the will of the father inherits the same as if no will had been made; 160 Pa. 433. In others, all children born after the execution of the will, and in some states all children not provided for in the will, are placed on the same ground as if no will existed; 1 Will. Ex. 170, n. 1, 171, n. 1.

By the express provisions of the act of 1 Vict. the marriage of the testator, whether man or woman, amounts to a revocation; 1 Jarm. Wills 108-173. See 89 Law T. 20. Subsequent marriage revokes the antenuptial will made by a wife; 141 Mass. 75; contra, 60 N. H. 439. The adoption of a child does not revoke an antecedent will of the adopting parent; 124 Ind. 1.

Where a will is executed in duplicate, only one part of which the testator retains, if he destroys that one, an intention to revoke is presumed; 84 Ala. 53.

REPUBLICATION. This, under the statute of frauds, could only be done in the same manner a will of lands was required to be first executed. And the same rule obtains under the statute of 1 Vict., and in many, perhaps most, of the American states. The general rule may be said to be, that a will can be republished only by an instrument of as high a nature as that which revoked it. Thus a will once revoked by written declaration cannot be republished by parol; 2 Conn. 67; 9 Johns. 312; 12 Ired. L. 355; 7 Jones (N. C.) L. 134. In Pennsylvania, a parol republication is allowed. But the intention of the testator to republish must be clearly proved; 1 Grant, Cas. 75; 2 Whart. 108. It is doubtful, however, if parol evidence alone is sufficient; 10 Ired. L. 459. A codicil ratifying and confirming a will, in whole or in part, will amount to a republication of the will, as of the date of the codicil; 80 Neb. 149.

Constructive republication is effected by means of a codicil, unless neutralized by internal evidence of a contrary intention; 1 Eq. Cas. Abr. 406, D. pl. 5; 1 Ves. Sen. 437; 1 Jarm. Wills 175, and notes; 3 Pick. 218.

PROBATE OF WILLS. The proof of a will of personal property must always be made in the probate court. But in England the probate of the will is not evidence in regard to real estate. In most of the American states the same rule obtains in regard to real as to personal estate—as the probate court has exclusive jurisdiction, in most of the states, in all matters pertaining to the settlement of estates; 9 Co. 36, 38 a; 4 Term 260; 1 Jarm. Wills 118; 8 N. H. 124; 12 Metc. 421; 8 Ohio 5. An executor who offers a will for probate in Maryland is required to be examined on oath whether or not he knows of any other will or codicil; Laws, 1890, ch. 416.

In New York on petition for probate of will the surrogate must cite all persons in being who would take an interest in any portion of the property, executors, and trustees; Laws, 1891, ch. 174.

In Vermont there is a provision by statute for notice to legatees on the admission to probate of a will containing bequests to associations; Laws, 1892, ch. 47.

In Oregon wills must be recorded in all counties in which the testator left real property; Laws 1891, p. 8. A will refused probate for want of testamentary capacity in the state of testator's domicile has been admitted to probate in another state where lands passed under it; 4 Call 89; and see 45 La. Ann. 1237. See PROBATE OF WILLS.

The probate of a will has no effect out of the jurisdiction of the court before which probate is made, either as to persons or property in a foreign jurisdiction; 8 Ves. Ch. 44; 1 Johns. Ch. 153; 12 Vt. 569; Story, Conf. Laws § 512-517. In regard to the probate of wills passing realty, the lex rei sitæ governs; personality is controlled by the lex domicilii; Whart. Conf. Laws § 570, 587, 593; 8 Bradf. 879; Story, Conf. Laws § 59, 431; 10 Moore, P. C. 306. But the indorsement of negotiable paper by the executor or administrator in the place of his appointment will enable the indorsee to maintain an action in a foreign state upon the paper in his own name; 9 Wend. 425. But see 5 Me. 261; 2 N. H. 291, where the rule is held otherwise. The executor may dispose of bankshares in a foreign state without proving the will there; 12 Metc. 421.

Any person interested in the will may compel probate of it by application to the probate court, who will summon the executor or party having the custody of it; 4 Pick. 38; 3 Bacon, Abr. 34, Executors. The judge of probate may cite the executor to prove the will at the instance of any one claiming an interest; 4 Pick. 33; 1 Will. Ex. 201; 1 Jarm. Wills 224. The attesting witnesses are indispensable, if the contestants so insist, as proof of the execution and authenticity of the will and the competency of the testator, when they can be had; 2 Greenl. Ev. § 691; 1 Jarm. Wills 226, and note. But if all or part of the subscribing witnesses are absent from the state, deceased, or disqualified, then their handwriting must be proved; 9 Ves. Ch. 381; 19 Johns. 186; 1 Jarm. Wills 226, and notes. And see 17 Ga. 364; 9 Pick. 350; 8 Rand. 33. It will be presumed that the requisite formalities were complied with when the attestation is formal, unless the contrary appear; 8 Md. 15; 11 N. Y. 220; 30 Pa. 218; 1 Jarm. Wills 228, and notes; 36 S. C. 428. But it has sometimes been held that no such presumption will be made in the absence of a subscribing witness who might be called; 19 Johns. 386. While the probate of a will settles the question of due execution, it does not establish validity, or determine its force and effect upon titles to real estate claimed under it; 50 Fed. Rep. 310. Wills over thirty years old, and appearing regular and perfect, and coming from the proper custody, are said to prove themselves; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 21, 570. See LOST INSTRUMENT.

In most of the United States statutory provision has been made for proving foreign wills by exemplified copy; 3 Jarm. Wills (Randolph & Talcott's edition) 725, note.

GIFTS VOID FOR UNCERTAINTY. Where the subject-matter of the gifts is not so defined in the will as to be ascertained with reasonable certainty; 25 Pa. 460; 12 Gratt. 196; 1 Jarm. Will 317; 1 Swanst. 201; the person intended to be benefited may not be so described or named that he can be identified. But, in general, by rejecting obvious mistakes, this kind of uncertainty is overcome; 1 Jarm. Wills 330-348, and notes. Determinate meanings have now been assigned to numerous doubtful words and phrases, and rules of construction adopted by the courts, which render devises void for uncertainty less frequent than formerly; 1 Jarm. Wills 356-363. A will otherwise effective, should not be refused probate because certain bequests contained therein are void for uncertainty; 74 Cal. 144; 27 Abb. N. C. 429; 4 Misc. Rep. 232; 76 Hun 469; 80 Tenn. 219. By statute in California when the validity of a gift, devise, or trust under a will is involved in an action, the will is admissible as evidence, and the validity of the gift, devise, or trust shall be determined; Laws, 1896, p. 77.

The testator's body cannot be disposed of by his will, because the law recognizes no property in a dead body, and it is the duty of the executor to bury it; 81 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 508.

PAROL EVIDENCE, HOW FAR ADMISSIBLE. The rule in regard to the admissibility of parol evidence to vary, control, or to render intelligible the words of a will, is not essentially different from that which obtains in regard to contracts. It may be received to show the state of the testator, the nature and condition of his property, his relation to the contestants, and all the surrounding circumstances. But this is done to place the court in the condition of the testator, in order as far as practicable to enable them the more fully to understand the sense in which he probably used the language found in his will; 1 Nev. & M. 524; 15 Pick. 400; 1 Phill. Ev. 532-547; 1 Greenl. Ev. §§ 287-290; 1 Jarm. Wills 349, and notes; 2 Ired. 192. To ascertain the intention of testator, circumstances existing at the date of the execution of a will, but not those subsequent thereto, are admissible in evidence; 133 N. Y. 456; 154 Pa. 523; 92 Ga. 216. Letters and oral declarations of the testator are not admissible to show the intention of the testator; 2 Vern. 625; 14 Johns. 1; 2 W. & S. 455. But see 23 Wend. 148. Parol evidence is not admissible to supply any word or defect in the will; 7 Gill & J. 127; 8 Conn. 254; 23 Barb. 285; 27 Ala. N. S. 489. Parol declarations of the testator about the time of making the will are often admitted to show the state of mind, capacity, and understanding of the testator; but they are not to be used to show his intention; that must be learned from the language used; 8 Conn. 254; 156 Mass. 379; id. 265. Parol evidence is inadmissible to prove that a gift to a nephew was really intended for the wife's nephew of the same name; 187 Pa. 118; but see 13 Harv. L. Rev. 210. See, generally, Tud. Lead. Cas. R. P. 918; Wigram, Wills.

As to construction of wills see DEVISE; LEGACY. See also Schouler; Jarm. Theobald, Wills; CANCELLATION; LATENT AMBIGUITY; AMBIGUITY; LEGACY; MURDER; NUNCUPATIVE WILL. As to conditions in restraint of marriage, see CONDITION; RESTRAINT OF MARRIAGE.

See, generally, as to statutory provisions, the very full and learned note, at the end of Raudolph & Talcott's edition of Jarm. Wills (vol. 3). As to what is necessary to constitute a devise by implication, see 10 Lawy. Rep. Ann. 818, n.

Foreign Wills. Where a German testator specially appointed a person in England to realize on his English estate and transmit the proceeds to the German executor, the court declined to grant probate to these persons as executors according to the tenor of the will; [1894] 2 Q. B. 260.

Where property was settled upon English trustees with power of appointment, the owner of the power exercised the power it gave by will made in English form but invalid by French law. It was held that the appointment was valid; L. R. 1 P. D. 90.

There may be independent wills in different jurisdictions; [1894] P. 9; [1896] P. 65.

Where a testator made two separate wills dealing separately with English and Scotch assets, the court being satisfied that no creditor would be prejudiced, granted letters under the English will without requiring the Scotch will to be incorporated, upon condition that a copy thereof should be filed and a note to that effect made on the probate; [1891] P. 285.

Where an executor was absent and expected to be absent for two years and had given X a power of attorney to act for him, administration with the will annexed was granted to X for the benefit of the executor; [1891] P. 251.

In Georgia no more witnesses are required to prove a foreign will of personality than for its execution; Laws, 1892, p. 112. A New York statute of May 14, 1892, Laws, c. 591, provides how the validity of a will may be tested in court, and a South Carolina act of Dec. 24, 1891, Laws, c. 723, prescribes the proceedings where a person producing a will is a non-resident.

In Criminal Law. The power of the mind which directs the action of a man.

In criminal jurisprudence, the necessity of the concurrence of the will is deemed so far indispensable that, in general, those persons are held not amenable as offenders against the law who have merely done the act prohibited, without the concurrence of the will. This has reference to different classes of persons who are regarded as laboring under defect of will, and are, therefore, incapable of committing crime.

Infants, who, from want of age, are excused from punishment. The age of discretion, or capacity for crime, is fixed, by the common law of England, at fourteen years; 1 Hale, Pl. Cr. 25-29; 1 Russ. Cr. 2; and between males and females, no distinction is made in regard to capacity for crime; 1 Hale, Pl. Cr. 25-29.

Below the age of seven years, infants are presumed so incapable of any malicious design as not to incur the guilt of felony or of any other crime; 1 Hale, Pl. Cr. supra.

Between the ages of seven and fourteen years, an infant, although presumed, prima facie, incapable of incurring the guilt of crime, is, nevertheless, liable to trial and to be proved guilty upon the facts of the particular case evincing guilty consciousness. The reports abound with cases where clear evidence of criminal consciousness was shown, and of very marked atrocity, from the age of nine years and upward; 1 Russ. Cr. 2-6; 1 Hale, Pl. Cr. 25-29. See INFANT; DISCRETION.

Persons laboring under mental imbecility are not amenable for crime. See INSANITY; LUCID INTERVALS.

Persons subject to the power of others. This exemption from crime, in the English common law, extends to the wife while in the immediate presence and under the power of the husband, but not to a child or servant. And in respect of the enormity of the offences of treason and murder, the wife even is not excused by the command of the husband; 1 Hale, Pl. Cr. 44, 516; 1 Hawk. Pl. Cr. c. 1, s. 14. The wife is liable, too, for all offences committed not in the presence of the husband, and also where she is the principal party concerned; 1 Hawk. Pl. Cr. c. 1, § 14; 1 Hale, Pl. Cr. 44, 516. The distinction between the wife and the child and especially the servant, where the relation of master and servant is of a permanent character, or where the law gives the master unlimited control over the acts of the servant, seems not to rest upon any well-founded basis in present social relations. The English law does not regard one in the power of robbers or of an armed force of rebels as responsible, criminaliter, for his acts. No more should one be who is wholly under the power of another, as a child or servant may be; 1 Russ. Cr. 14. See Ch. J. Howe, 18 St. Trials 298. These questions should, in strictness, be referred to the jury as matters of fact. See DURESS; COERCION.

Ignorance of law will not excuse any one. But ignorance of fact sometimes renders that innocent which would otherwise be a crime: as, where one kills an innocent person, mistaking him for an assassin or robber; 1 Hale, Pl. Cr. c. 6; 1 Russ. Cr. 19, 20. See IGNORANCE; INFLUENCE; MANCIPATORY WILL.

WILL AND CONVEY. "Will and convey" are construed as equivalent to "give and convey." 23 Ky. R. 1341.

WILL, ESTATES AT. See ESTATES AT WILL.

WILL, SIGNING OF. See CLOSE THEREOF.

WINCHESTER. STATUTE OF. An English statute, 18 Edw. I. relating to the internal police of the kingdom. It required every man to provide himself with armor to aid in keeping the peace; and if it did not create the offices of high and petty constables, it recognized and regulated them, and charged them with duties answering somewhat to those of our militia officers. The statute took its name from the ancient capital of the kingdom. It was repealed by the statute of 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 27.

WIND SHOT. A "wind shot" is caused by a failure to make the holes for a blast of sufficient depth, or to sufficiently tamp the powder in the holes so that when touched off it flashes out of the drill holes instead of tearing out the coal. 143 Ky. 350, 136 S. W. 620.

WINDFALL. See TIMBER; WOODS.

WINDING UP. The process of liquidating the assets of a partnership or corporation, for purposes of distribution. In England a number of statutes, known as the Winding-up Acts, have been passed to facilitate the settlement of partnership affairs; Lind. Part. book iv. c. 3.

WINDOW. An opening made in the wall of a house to admit light and air, and to enable those who are in to look out. Cited in 46 Mo. App. 508.

The owner has a right to make as many windows in his house, when not built on the line of his property, as he may deem proper, although by so doing he may destroy the privacy of his neighbors; Bacon, Abr. Actions in General (B).

In cities and towns it is evident that the owner of a house cannot open windows in the party wall, q. v., without the consent of the owner of the adjoining property, unless he possesses the right of having ancient lights, which see. The opening of such windows and destroying the privacy of the adjoining property is not, however, actionable; the remedy against such encroachment is by obstructing them, without encroaching upon the rights of the party who opened them, so as to prevent a right from being acquired by twenty years' use, 3 Camp. 82; 4 Misc. Rep. 49. A bay or bow-window that projects over the land of another is a nuisance, and actionable as though it was an actual invasion of the soil; 107 Mass. 294; 16 S. & R. 590; Wood, Nuisance 118. Where it projects beyond the street line, it has been held in Pennsylvania a purpresture, and the erection of it may be restrained by injunction, although authorized by a special city ordinance; 10 W. N. C. Pa. 10; see 100 Pa. 192; whether the window reached to the ground; id.; or was built out of the second story; 39 Leg. Int. Pa. 108. See AIR; ANCIENT LIGHTS; HIGHWAY; BAY WINDOW; LIGHT.

WINDOW, BOW. See WINDOW, BAY; WINDOW.

WINDOW, ORIEL. See WINDOW BAY.

WINDOW TAX. A tax formerly levied, in England, upon the occupants of houses with more than a certain number of windows and increased as the number of windows in the house rose. Finally abandoned in 1851, when the Inhabited House Duty (q. v.) was substituted. Byrne's L. Dict. See FUMAGE.

WINE. The unf fermented juice of the grape. 5 Blackf. 118. See LIQUOR LAWS.

A fruit juice. Thorpe, National and State Prohibition, 158; 58 Cong. Rec. 4848. A fermented grape juice. Id.; 191 Ind. 319. It includes all commercial brands of wine. Id.; 85 W. Va. 261. Wine of peysin may be a beverage, as well as a medicine. Id.; 151 Minn. 340. Wine is a well-known form of vinous liquor, and it is common knowledge that it contains alcohol. ***** Its character is so well known that the court takes judicial notice of these qualities, and also that it contains considerably more than 1 per cent. of alcohol by volume, that it is intoxicating when taken into the stomach, and that it may be used as a beverage. Id.; 168 Cal. 521. See INTOXICATING LIQUOR.

WINNER. The proprietor of a gaming house who receives a certain per cent of the winnings of each game, called the take-out, is interested in the winnings to that extent, and is, therefore, a "winner" within the meaning of a statute which gives a right of action to the loser to recover from the "winner" what he may have lost. 91 Ky. 30, 14 S. W. 949.

WINTER. When we speak of "winter" we mean the cold season of the year, and it necessarily includes a part of two years, the latter part of one, and the early part of the following. 116 S. W. 260.

WIRELESS TELEGRAPHY. An electric telegraph system by which signals may be conveyed from one station to another without the use of connecting wires. Stand. Dict.

In England. Under the Merchant Shipping (Convention) Act, 1914, all British ships ordinarily carrying more than fifty persons in all must be provided with wireless apparatus of the prescribed efficiency unless they be ships not going more than 150 miles from land or sailing ships incapable of working the apparatus, both of which classes of ships may be exempted under rules made by the Board of Trade. Under the Merchant Shipping (Wireless Telegraphy) Act, 1919, every British steamer carrying more than 12 passengers, and every British ship of 1,600 tons gross, must have wireless installed unless the Board of Trade gives her an exemption on the ground that such installation is unnecessary or unreasonable. Byrne.

WIRES. By the provisions of the Revised Statutes § 5283, electrical companies must so construct and maintain their lines as not to obstruct ordinary travel or navigation. This act grants to the companies which accept its provisions a species of easement or right of way; 88 Fed. Rep. 552. It does not prevent state legislatures from enacting statutes requiring telegraph wires to be placed underground; 125 N. Y. 641; 145 U. S. 175; and when declared a nuisance, they may be forcibly removed, although the subways are not in a condition to receive them; 125 N. Y. 641.

The attachment of wires to the roof of a building may be prohibited by municipal ordinance in the exercise of the police power; 45 Fed. Rep. 493; and the company is liable to the owner of the premises for making such attachment without permission; 114 Mass. 149.

Although not an insurer of safety to travellers all reasonable precautions must be taken in stringing wires; 2 Col. 148; 91 U. S. 495; and in investigating promptly detached or grounded wires; 161 Mass. 533; 27 S. W. Rep. (Tex.) 66; and in removing dead wires in the case of fire or accident; 83 Minn. 340; but the mere fact that one was killed by a hanging wire does not prove negligence; 84 Atl. Rep. (N. J.) 1069; contra, 114 N. C. 208.

In many of the states the insulation of the wire is made the subject of statutory provision, and even in the absence of such provision, it has been held that non-insulation is negligence; 161 Mass. 533.

The company will be liable for damages if a dead wire, coming into contact with a live wire of another company, becomes charged and causes injury or death; 27 S. W. Rep. (Tex.) 66.

One whose occupation requires his proximity to an electric wire may presume it to be insulated; 44 La. Ann. 692; and he is not required to make an examination in order to ascertain if such be the case; 107 Cal. 120. A traveller may pick up a wire from the street and throw it outside the regular line of travel without being guilty of contributory negligence; 156 Mass. 393; 114 N. C. 203; 27 S. W. Rep. (Tex.) 66. For injuries so received damages may be recovered either from the city; 156 Mass. 393; or from the company; 27 S. W. Rep. (Tex.) 66. But in order to sustain an action for damages, it must be clearly shown that there was no contributory negligence; 9 So. Rep. (La.) 433. It has been considered contributory negligence to step on a live wire after a warning; 9 Houst. 308.

The wires of electric light and electric railway companies, unlike those of telegraph and telephone companies, carry a strong and dangerous current, and such companies are bound to the highest degree of care in the pursuit of their business; 114 N. C. 203.

If a telephone wire has been negligently allowed to drop across a trolley wire, the owner of the latter is jointly liable with the owner of the telephone wire for injuries to a third person caused by electricity conveyed through it from the trolley wire; 33 S. W. Rep. (Ark.) 426. See 31 L. R. A. 566; 9 Harv. L. Rev. 505; Keasbey, Electric Wires; Croswell, Electricity; ELECTRIC LIGHT; TELEGRAPH; TELEPHONE; NEGLIGENCE; MASTER AND SERVANT.

WIRTA. A measure of land among the Saxons, containing sixty acres.

WISBUY, LAWS OF. See CODE.

WISCONSIN. One of the states of the United States.

It was originally part of the Northwest Territory. See Omaha. It was made a separate territory, with the name of Wisconsin, by act of April 30, 1836. The territory was afterwards divided, and the territory of Iowa set off, June 12, 1838. It was admitted into the Union May 29, 1845.

WISERS. See HUISSENUM.

WISH. See HOPE; WANT.

WISH AND REQUEST. In Will. The words "wish" and "request" as used in a will are considered sufficient to raise a trust where the subject and object are sufficiently certain. 78 Ky. 128.

WIT. Know. To know. To-wit; to know.

WITCHCRAFT. Under 83 Hen. VIII. c. 8 and 1 Jac. I. c. 12, the offence of witchcraft, or supposed intercourse with evil spirits, was punishable with death. These acts were not repealed till 1736. 4 Bla. Com. 60.

WITENA-GEMOTE (spelled, also, witena-gemot, gewitena-gemote; from the Saxon wita, a wise man, gemote, assembly,—the assembly of wise men).

An assembly of the great men of the kingdom in the time of the Saxons, to advise and assist in the government of the realm.

It was the grand council of the kingdom, and was held, generally, in the open air, by public notice or particular summonses, in or near some city or populous town. These notices or summonses were issued upon determination by the king's select council, or the body met without notice, when the throne was vacant, to elect a new king. Subsequently to the Norman conquest it was called commune concilium regni, curiam agna, and finally parliament; but its character had become considerably changed. It was a court of last resort, more especially for determining disputes between the king and his thanes, and, ultimately, from all inferior tribunals. Great offenders, particularly those who were members of or might be summoned to the king's court, were here tried. The casual loss of title-deeds was supplied, and a very extensive equity jurisdiction exercised. 1 Spence, Eq. Jur. 73; 1 Bla. Com. 147; 1 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law 7; 9 Co. Pref.

The principal duties of the witena-gemote, besides acting as high court of judicature, was to elect the sovereign, assist at his coronation, and co-operate in the enactment and administration of the laws. It made treaties jointly with the king, and aided him in directing the military affairs of the kingdom. Examination into the state of churches, monasteries, their possessions, discipline, and morals, were made before this tribunal. It appointed magistrates, and regulated the coin of the kingdom. It also provided for levying upon the people all such sums as the public necessities required; and no property of a freeman was, in fact, taxable without the consent of the gemote. Bede, lib. 2, c. 5; 3 Turner, Angl. Sax. 209; 1 Dugdale, Mon. 20; Sax. Chron. 128, 140.

The deliberations of their body had great weight; all important actions, such as law-making, were done by their advice; but they could not and did not pretend to do without the consent of the freeholders when a capital decision—such as the voting of a tax, the election of a king, the passing of a law—was in question. At first the king of the English would go around with his proposed laws to these several folk-motes, getting the separate consent of each, but in the tenth century the kings bethought them of summoning the moots of the various shires to meet them at some convenient central spot, as Oxford or London, and what this collective moot or Mycel-gemot agreed to need not be confirmed again, since men from every shire were present. The Mycel-gemot was the Magnum Concilium of the Normans and developed into the High Courts and Parliaments of the thirteenth century. 1 Social England 138. See Stevens, Sources of the Constitution 62.

WITH. The preposition "with" is in general use, as noting connection, appendage, company of, and concomitance. 6 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 51.

WITH ALL FAULTS. See ALL FAULTS.

WITH STRONG HAND. In Pleading. A technical phrase indispensable in describing a forcible entry in an indictment. No other word or circumlocution will answer the same purpose. 8 Term 357.

WITHDRAW. To take away what has been enjoyed; to take from. 54 Ga. 409.

WITHDRAWING A JUROR. An agreement made between the parties in a suit to require one of the twelve jurors impelled to try a cause to leave the jury-box; the act of leaving the box by such a juror is also called the withdrawing a juror.

This arrangement usually takes place at the recommendation of the judge, when it is obviously improper the case should proceed any further. And it seems now settled that in civil cases the court has power to do this, in the exercise of a sound discretion, without the consent of the parties, instead of consulting the plaintiff; 8 Cow. 127.

The effect of withdrawing a juror puts an end to that particular trial, and each party must pay his own costs; 3 Term 657; 2 Dowl. 721; 1 Cr. M. & R. 64. In Pennsylvania, the costs abide the event of the suit; Tr. & H. Pr. § 689.

But the plaintiff may bring a new suit for the same cause of action; Ry. & M. 402; 3 B. & Ad. 349. See 3 Chitty, Pr. 917.

In American practice, however, the same cause goes over, or is continued, without impairing the rights of either party, until the next term.

Where the plaintiff, at the suggestion of the judge, withdraws a juror, with the understanding of bringing the matter to a final conclusion, it amounts to an undertaking not to bring an action for the same cause; and if a second action be commenced, the court will stay the proceedings as against good faith; 1 Chit. Arch. Pr. 285. If, after a prisoner has pleaded to an indictment, and after the jury have been sworn and evidence offered, the public prosecutor, without the consent of the prisoner, withdraw a juror merely because he is unprepared with his evidence, the prisoner cannot afterwards be tried on the same indictment; 2 Cal. Cas. 804; Arch. Cr. Pr. & Pl. 347.

WITHDRAWING RECORD. The withdrawing by plaintiff's attorney of the nisi prius record filed in a cause, before a jury is sworn, has the same effect as a motion to postpone. 2 C. & P. 185; 8 Camp. 388.

WITHERNAM. The name of a writ which issues on the return of elongata to an alias or pluries writ of replevin, by which the sheriff is commanded to take the defendant's own goods which may be found in his bailiwick, and keep them safely, not to deliver them to the plaintiff until such time as the defendant chooses to submit himself and allow the distress, and the whole of it to be replevied; and he is thereby further commanded that he do return to the court in what manner he shall have executed the writ. Hamm. N. P. 453; Co. 2d Inst. 140; Fitzh. N. B. 68, 69.

WITHHOLD. Withholding property is not equivalent to concealing property. To withhold commissions implies a temporary suspension rather than a total and final denial or rejection of the same. 149 U. S. 578.

WITHIN. In the limits or compass of. 54 Ala. 531. In may be used in the sense of in or at the end of. 4 Cush. 420.

"Within one month from the return day" is equivalent to "for space of one month after the return day." 7 T. B. Moh. (Ky.) 521.

WITHOUT. Outside; beyond. 91 U. S. 277; 9 Mass. 456.

WITHOUT DAY. This signifies that the cause or thing to which it relates is indefinitely adjourned; as, when a case is adjourned without day it is not again to be inquired into. When the legislature adjourn without day, they are not to meet again. This is usually expressed in Latin, sine die.

WITHOUT IMPEACHMENT OF WASTE. When a tenant for life holds the land without impeachment of waste, he is, of course, punishable for waste, whether wilful or otherwise. But still this right must not be wantonly abused so as to destroy the estate; and he will be enjoined from committing malicious waste; Bac. Abr. Waste (N); 2 Eq. Cas. Abr. Waste (A. pl. 8). See IMPEACHMENT OF WASTE; WASTE.

WITHOUT PREJUDICE. See COMPROMISE.

WITHOUT RECOURSE. See SANS RECOURS; INDEORSEMENT.

WITHOUT RESERVE. These words are frequently used in conditions of sale at public auction, that the property offered, or to be offered, for sale, will be sold without reserve. When a property is advertised to be sold without reserve, if a puffer be employed to bid, and actually bid at the sale, the courts will not enforce a contract against a purchaser, into which he may have been drawn by the vendor's want of faith; 5 Madd. 34. See PUFFER; AUCTION.

WITHOUT STINT. Without limit; without any specified number.

WITHOUT THIS, THAT. In Pleading. These are technical words used in a traverse (q. v.) for the purpose of denying a material fact in the preceding pleadings, whether declaration, plea, replication, etc. The Latin term is absque hoc (q. v.). Com. Dig. Pleader (G 1); 1 Chitty, Pl. 578, note a.

WITNESS (Anglo-Saxon witan, to know). One who testifies to what he knows. One who testifies under oath to something which he knows at first hand. 1 Greenl. Ev. §§ 98, 328.

One who is called upon to be present at a transaction, as, a wedding, or the making of a will. When a person signs his name to a written instrument to signify that the same was executed in his presence, he is called an attesting witness.

The principal rules relating to witnesses are the same in civil and in criminal cases, and the same in all the courts, as well in those various courts whose forms of proceeding are borrowed from the civil law, as in those of the common law; 3 Greenl. Ev. §§ 249, 402; 2 Ven. Ch. 41; 17 Mass. 303.

AS TO THE COMPETENCY OF WITNESSES. The question of the competency of a witness is for the court, and not for the jury; 37 W. Va. 565; 107 Mo. 37; and an objection to competency is not necessarily waived if not taken before his examination in chief; 17 S. E. Rep. (Va.) 946.

All persons, of whatever nation, may be witnesses; Bacon, Abr. Evidence (A). But in saying this we must, of course, except such as are excluded by the very definition of the term; and we have seen it to be essential that a witness should qualify himself by taking an oath. Therefore, all who cannot understand the nature and obligation of an oath, or whose religious belief is so defective as to nullify and render it nugatory, or whose crimes have been such as to indicate an extreme insensibility to its sanctions, are excluded. And, accordingly, the following classes of persons have been pronounced by the common law to be incompetent. See OATH.

Infants so young as to be unable to appreciate the nature and binding quality of an oath. A child under the age of fourteen is presumed incapable until capacity be shown, but the law fixes no limit of age which will of itself exclude. Whenever a child displays sufficient intelligence to observe and to narrate, it can be admitted to testify; 7 C. & P. 320; 2 Brewst. 404; 44 Mich. 490; 88 Ala. 151; 88 Wis. 180; 159 U. S. 523. A child five years old has been admitted to testify; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 367; 8 C. & P. 598; 1 Mood. 86; 10 Mass. 225; 8 Johns. 98; 89 Wis. 180; 159 U. S. 523. But if the child is not sufficiently instructed on this "point," the trial may be put off, in order to give the necessary instruction; 2 Leach, C. C. 86; but only in the discretion of the court; 2 C. & K. 246. The law presumes that all witnesses tendered in a court of justice are not only competent but credible. If a witness is incompetent, this must be shown by the party objecting to him; if he is not credible, this must be shown either from his examination, or by impeaching evidence alibi; 1 Whart. Ev. § 392. See DISCRETION.

Idiots, lunatics, intoxicated persons, and, generally, those who labor under such privation or imbecility of mind that they cannot understand the nature and obligation of an oath. The competency of such is restored with the recovery or acquisition of this power; 10 Johns. 362; 28 Conn. 177; 16 Vt. 474; 7 Wheat. 453; but the question of their credibility should be left to the jury; 97 Ala. 85. And so a lunatic in a lucid interval may testify; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 365; even though an inmate of an insane asylum; 36 Atl. Rep. (Del.) 458; 82 Fed. Rep. 720; or one who has been adjudged insane; 80 id. 85. Persons deaf and dumb from their birth are presumed to come within this principle of exclusion until their competency is shown; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 366; but such a person is not deemed to be an idiot; 118 Mo. 127. A witness unable to speak or hear is not incompetent, but may give his evidence by writing or by signs, or in any other manner in which he can make it intelligible; Steph. Ev. art. 107. See 11 Cush. 417. A person in a state of intoxication cannot be admitted as a witness; 15 S. & R. 235. See Ray, Med. Jur. c. 22, § 300; 16 Johns. 143. Deficiency in perception must go to the incapacity of perceiving the matter in dispute, in order to operate as an exclusion, hence a blind man can testify to what he has heard, and a deaf man to what he has seen; 1 Whart. Ev. § 401.

Such as are insensible to the obligation of an oath, from defect of religious sentiment or belief. Atheists, and persons disbelieving in any system of divine rewards and punishments, are of this class. It is reckoned sufficient qualification in this particular if one believe in a God and that he will reward and punish us according to our deserts. It is enough to believe that such punishment visits us in this world only; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 369; 5 Mass. 18; 14 Mass. 184; 26 Pa. 274; 16 Ohio 121; 7 Conn. 66; 22 So. Rep. (La.) 841.

It matters not, so far as mere competency is concerned, that a witness should believe in one God, or in one God rather than another, or should hold any particular form of religious belief, provided only that he brings himself within the rule above laid down. And, therefore, the oath may be administered in any form whatever, and with any ceremonies whatever, that will bind the conscience of the witness; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 371; 1 Sm. L. Cas. 789. By statute in England and in most of the United States, religious disbelief no longer disqualifies, provision being made for an affirmation instead, and the witness, if testifying falsely, being subject to the penalties of perjury; Whart. Ev. § 395, n. See ATHEIST.

Persons infamous, i. e. those who have committed and been legally convicted of crimes the nature and magnitude of which show them to be insensible to the obligation of an oath. See INFAMY. Such crimes are enumerated under the heads of treason, felony, and the crimen falsi; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 373; 2 Dods. Adm. 191. See CRIMEN FALSI.

The only method of establishing infamy is by producing the record of conviction. It is not even sufficient to show an admission of guilt by the witness himself; 9 Cow. 707; 2 Mass. 108; 97 id. 587; but in England a witness may be asked whether he has been convicted, etc.; Steph. Ev. art. 130. Pardon or the reversal of a sentence restores the competency of an infamous person, except where this disability is annexed to an offence by a statute; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 378; 2 Salk. 513; 2 Harg. Jurid. Arg. 221. See 53 Fed. Rep. 352; 144 U. S. 263; 21 Tex. App. 1; even if granted for the reason, among others, that his testimony was desired by the government in a cause then pending; 142 U. S. 450. See PARDON.

This exclusion on account of infamy or defect in religious belief applies only where a person is offered as a witness; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 374; 2 Q. B. 721. But wherever one is a party to the suit, wishing to make affidavit in the usual course of proceeding, and, in general, wherever the law requires an oath as the condition of its protection or its aid, it presumes conclusively and absolutely that all persons are capable of an oath; Stark. Ev. 393; 1 Ashm. 57. There is a conflict of authority as to how far a foreign judgment of an infamous offence disqualifies a witness. In New York, he is not disqualified; 77 N. Y. 400. In Pennsylvania, he is held not to be disqualified unless the record of conviction be produced, and not then if he has served out his term of imprisonment; 8 Brewst. 461. In Massachusetts, the record is admitted merely to affect his credibility; 17 Mass. 575. In New Hampshire, the witness will be disqualified if the laws of his own state make him so, and the crime, if committed in New Hampshire, would have had the same effect; 10 N. H. 22. In Alabama; 23 Ala. 44; and Virginia; 6 Gratt. 706; the record is rejected altogether; but not so in North Carolina; 8 Hawks 393. He is disqualified in Nevada; 15 Nev. 64. See Whart. Conf. Laws §§ 107, 769. A conviction and sentence can have no such effect beyond the limits of the state in which the judgment is rendered unless the statute of another state give such effect to them; 144 U. S. 203. If a statute permits a defendant in a criminal case to testify on his own behalf, he may do so, though infamous, but not against a co-defendant; 85 S. C. 279.

Slaves were generally held incompetent to testify, by statutory provisions, in the slave states, in suits between white persons; 7 T. B. Monr. 91; 4 Ohio 333; 5 Litt. 171.

When it is said that all persons may be witnesses, it is not meant that all persons may testify in all cases. The testimony of such as are generally qualified and competent under other circumstances or as to other matters is sometimes excluded out of regard to their special relations to the cause in issue or the parties, or from some other circumstances not working a general disqualification.

Parties to the record were not competent witnesses, at common law, for themselves or their co-suitors. Nor were they compellable to testify for the adverse party; 7 Bingh. 395; 20 Johns. 142; 21 Pick. 57; 11 Conn. 342; but they were competent to do so; although one of several co-suitors could not thus become a witness for the adversaries without the consent of his associates; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 354; 5 How. 91; 6 Humph. 405. Regard was had not merely to the nominal party to the record, but also to the real party in interest; and the former was not allowed to testify for the adverse side without the consent of the latter; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 339; 16 Pick. 501; 20 Johns. 142. Persons who have no interest in the matter in controversy are not incompetent merely because parties to the action; 118 Ind. 227; 134 U. S. 650.

In some jurisdictions a party had the right of compelling his adversary to answer interrogatories under oath, as also to appear and testify. And, in equity, parties could require and use each other's testimony; and the answer of a defendant as to any matters stated in the bill was evidence in his own favor; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 329; 2 Story, Eq. Jur. 1528.

There were other exceptions to this rule. Cases where the adverse party had been guilty of some fraud or other tortious and unwarrantable act of intermeddling with the complainant's goods, and no other evidence than that of the complainant himself could be had of the amount of damage,—cases, also, where evidence of the parties was deemed essential to the purposes of public justice, no other evidence being attainable,—were exceptions; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 348; 1 Me. 27.

On this same principle, persons directly interested in the result of the suit (see INTEREST), or in the record as an instrument of evidence, were excluded; and where the event of the cause turned upon a question which if decided one way would have rendered the party offered as a witness liable, while a contrary decision would have protected him, he was excluded; Stark. Ev. 1730. But to this rule, also, there were exceptions: Stark. Ev. 1731; of which the case of agents testifying as to matters to which their agency extended, forms one; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 386; so also an employee of a charitable institution; 108 Pa. 155; or a taxpayer of a town to which a library was given by will; 160 Mass. 140; were not incompetent for interest.

In both England and the United States, the rules of exclusion on the ground of interest have been abrogated. The object of the statutes has been to remove all artificial restraints to competency so as to put the parties upon a footing of equality with other witnesses, both in their admissibility to testify for themselves, and in their being compellable to testify for others; 21 Wall. 488. In most of the statutes, however, cases are excepted where a suit is brought by or against executors or administrators. In these cases where one of the parties to a contract is dead, the survivor is not permitted to testify; 66 Pa. 297; but this exception does not exclude directors or stockholders of a corporation which is a party, when the other party is dead; 82 S. W. Rep. (Mo.) 654; 24 S. E. Rep. (Ga.) 409. But the exception does not make the surviving party incompetent, it only precludes him from testifying to communications with the deceased; 59 Me. 259; 64 Ill. 121. The test is the nature of the communications. The witness cannot testify to personal communications with the deceased party; 64 Barb. 189; 12 Gray 459; 76 Ia. 101; 100 N. C. 160; but it has been held that if documents can be proved by independent evidence, the case is not within the exception; 21 Mich. 844. A husband may testify to conversation between his wife and the decedent, in which he took no part; 38 S. C. 159; but one who is interested in the contest of a will cannot testify as to conversations between testator and another in which the witness took no part; 78 Hun

48. If the suit is brought against co-defendants, of whom only one is dead, when the contract was made either with the living co-defendants, or with the living and dead concurrently, the case is not within the exception; 9 Allen 144; 22 Ohio St. 208. But where an action was brought against three partners, one of whom subsequently died, and his executors were substituted, the plaintiff is not a competent witness as to anything which occurred during the lifetime of the deceased partner although the latter may have taken no part in the contract on which the action was brought; 87 Pa. 111. In an action by a surviving partner on a book account, the defendant is competent to testify to payments by him to the deceased partner; 9 Ind. App. 321.

Under these statutes, which confine the exception to suits against executors and administrators, the death of an agent of one party, through whom the contract was made, does not prevent the surviving party from testifying to the contract; 2 W. N. C. (Pa.) 665; but under statutes which exclude the surviving party to a contract, the death of a contracting agent excludes the surviving party who contracted with him; 26 Wisc. 500. See 113 N. C. 551. An agent who makes a sale of goods for his principal is not incompetent to testify to the circumstances of the transaction because of the death of the buyer; 50 Ohio St. 648. Unless the exception expressly covers all suits against executors and administrators, it does not exclude the plaintiff from proving matters occurring since the death of the party of whom the defendant is executor; 48 N. H. 90. The exception in statutes where the exclusion relates only to the surviving party in contracts does not include torts; 60 Mo. 214. When the deposition of a deceased party afterwards is put in evidence, the other party being still living, such other party should be admitted as a witness in reply; 52 Ga. 385; 114 Mo. 66. See, generally, 12 L. R. A. 836. As to exclusion of testimony against a decedent on the ground of interest, see 12 Lawy. Rep. Ann. 836.

Husband and wife were excluded at common law from giving testimony for or against each other when either was a party to the suit or interested. And neither was competent to prove a fact directly tending to originate the other. This rule was founded partly on their identity of interest, and partly, perhaps chiefly, on the policy of the law which aims to protect the confidence between man and wife that is essential to the comfort of the married relation, and, through that, to the good order of society. Whether or not the disability of husband or wife may be removed by consent of the other is matter of dispute; 3 C. & P. 551; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 340. In England, by stat. 16 & 17 Vict. c. 83, consent removes the disability; Whart. Ev. § 426. But it is not removed by death, nor by the dissolution of the marriage relation, so far as respects information derived confidentially during marital intercourse; 47 N. H. 100. She may, however, testify as to matters which transpired subsequently to a divorce; 86 Ala. 36.

The wife of a member of a partnership is not competent as a witness in a suit against the partnership; 64 Vt. 583.

The rule is not ordinarily affected by statutes permitting husband or wife to testify for or against each other; 60 Barb. 527; nor does the statute as to the evidence of parties in interest generally affect their common-law incapacity to testify; 18 Wall. 452.

Some exceptions to this rule; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 348; are admitted out of necessity for the protection of husband and wife against each other, and for the sake of public justice, as in prosecutions for violence committed by either of them upon the other. See Bac. Abr. Evidence (A); 1 Greenl. Ev. § 384; 1 Ves. Ch. 49; Ry. & M. 259; 137 U. S. 496. It is not error to receive the testimony of the wife of a person on trial for murder by consent of his counsel if she is advised by the court that she need not testify unless she desires to do so; 148 U. S. 825.

Parties to negotiable instruments are, in some jurisdictions, held incompetent to invalidate these instruments to which they have given currency by their signature. Such seems to be the prevailing, but not universal, rule in the United States; while in England such testimony is admitted, the objection going only to its credibility; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 383; 1 Term 290; 9 Metc. 471; 8 How. 73; 5 N. H. 147; 20 Pa. 469; 24 Vt. 459; 18 Ohio 579; 1 Miss. 541; 1 Conn. 260; 4 Tex. 371; 8 Harr. & J. 172.

And, finally, there are certain confidential communications; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 236; to which the recipient of them, from general considerations of policy, is not allowed to testify. But the privilege may be waived by the party entitled to claim the benefit of it, as when two physicians were in consultation, a party by calling one waives the right to object to the testimony of the other against her; 42 N. E. Rep. (N. Y.) 410. See CONFIDENTIAL COMMUNICATIONS.

Judges are not compellable to testify to what occurred in their consultations; but they may be examined as to what took place before them on the trial in order to identify the case, or prove the testimony of a witness; 1 Whart. Ev. § 600; see 4 Sandf. 120; but in England there is a doubt as to the latter proposition; Steph. Ev. art. 111; and it is said that in England a barrister cannot be compelled to testify as to what he said in court in his character of barrister; id.

The fact that one is counsel in the case does not disqualify him from testifying; 82 Tex. Cr. R. 102.

Persons in possession of secrets of state or matters the disclosure of which would be prejudicial to the public interests, are not allowed to testify thereto; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 250.

Grand jurors and persons present before a grand jury; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 252; are not permitted to testify to the proceedings had before that body; 1 Phill. Ev. 177. See CONFIDENTIAL COMMUNICATIONS.

THE MEANS OF SECURING THE ATTENDANCE AND TESTIMONY OF WITNESSES. In general, all persons who are competent may be compelled to attend and testify. As to compelling expert witnesses to attend, see EXPERTS.

Provision has been made by statute, in most if not in all of the states, for the case of persons living at an inconvenient distance from the place of trial, as well as for the case of such as are sick or about to leave the state, or otherwise likely to be put to great inconvenience by a compulsory attendance, and also for such as are already in a foreign jurisdiction, by allowing the taking of their deposition in writing before some magistrate or officer near at hand, to be read at the trial; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 321.

In criminal cases, all persons are compellable to appear and testify without any previous tender of their fees; and any bystander in court may be compelled to testify without a previous summons or tender of fees; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 311; 4 Cow. 49; 13 Mass. 501; 4 Cush. 249.

But in civil suits which are between man and man, a party is allowed to compel the attendance and testimony of a witness only on condition of a prepayment or tender of his fees for travel to the place of trial, and for one day's attendance there. This seems, as a general rule, to be the least that can be tendered; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 310; 4 Johns. 311; 1 Metc. Mass. 293; 8 Mo. 288; 41 N. H. 121. See 40 Ill. App. 629; and a witness who attends without the payment or tender of his fees, waives their tender or payment in advance; 87 Wis. 525. In the courts of the United States, as well as in England, a witness may require his fees for travel both ways; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 310; 6 Taunt. 88. And in civil cases a person cannot be compelled to testify, although he chance to be present in court, unless regularly summoned and tendered his fees; 1 Phill. Ev. 388.

Being in attendance in obedience to a summons, he may, nevertheless, refuse to testify from day to day, unless his daily fees are paid or tendered; 2 Phill. Ev. § 378. Whether or not he may refuse to attend from day to day without the prepayment or tender of his daily fees, is a matter about which there are different decisions; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 310; 10 Vt. 498; 14 East 15. A witness may maintain an action against the party summoning him for his fees; Stark. Ev. 1727. Federal courts allow mileage and per diem fees, although no subpoena was issued; 54 Fed. Rep. 464; 36 id. 113; 37 id. 844. As to additional compensation to experts, see EXPERTS, and also 43 N. E. Rep. (Ill.) 108, and comments thereon in 18 N. Y. L. J. (Dec. 8, 1897).

Witnesses are also compellable to produce papers in their custody to which either party has a right as evidence, on the same principle that they are required to testify what they know; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 558. See DISCOVERY; SUBPOENA DUCES TECUM.

This rule as to title-deeds appears to be peculiar to England. In this country, it is said that a witness, not a party, may be compelled to produce any of his private papers. Whether the court, on inspection, will require them to be put in evidence may be a matter of discretion; Steph. Ev. art. 118, n. See 14 Gray 236.

The attendance of witnesses is ordinarily procured by means of a writ of subpoena; sometimes, when they are in custody, by a writ of habeas corpus ad testificandum; and sometimes, in criminal cases, by their own recognizance, either with or without sureties; 1 Greenl. Ev. §§ 809, 812; 2 Phill. Ev. 370, 374. If a witness disobey the summons, process of attachment for contempt will issue to enforce his attendance and an action also lies against him at common law; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 819; 1 Stark. Ev. 1727.

Nor can any third party intervene to prevent the attendance of a witness. Neither can he take advantage of a witness's attendance at the place of trial, to arrest him on civil process. See PRIVILEGE FROM ARREST.

Where a non-resident is in attendance on a trial in a circuit court of the United States as a witness in a case therein pending, he is privileged from service of summons in a civil action issued from a state court of such state, and the privilege extends to a reasonable time after the disposition of the cause to enable him to return to his own state; 11 Fed. Rep. 582. See 25 Alb. L. J. 424; 53 Vt. 694; and this is the general rule.

AS TO THE EXAMINATION OF WITNESSES. In the common-law courts, examinations are had visu voce, in open court, by questions and answers. The same course is now adopted to a great extent in equity and admiralty courts, and other proceedings according to the forms of the civil law. But the regular method of examining in these last-named courts, as also in the court of claims, is by deposition taken in writing out of court; 2 Story, Eq. Jur. § 1527; 3 Greenl. Ev. § 251.

A trial court may ask a witness such questions as it deems necessary for its own information and that of the jury; 122 Mo. 607.

On motion, in civil and criminal cases, witnesses will generally be excluded from the court-room while others are undergoing examination in the same case; this, however, is not matter of right, but within the discretion of the court; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 432; 4 C. & P. 585; 2 Swan 287; 3 Wisc. 214.

Witnesses are required to testify from their own knowledge and recollection. Yet they are permitted to refresh their memory by reference, while on the stand, to papers written at or very near the time of the transaction in question. See MEMORANDUM.

Being once in attendance, a witness may, in general, be compelled to answer all questions that may legally be put to him. See EVIDENCE.

Yet there are exceptions to this rule.

He is not compellable where the answer would have a tendency to expose him to a penal liability or any kind of punishment, or to a criminal charge or a forfeiture of his estate; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 451. See PRIVILEGE.

The court, it is said, decides as to the tendency of the answer, and will instruct the witness as to his privilege; 2 Phill. Ev. 417; 4 Cush. 594; 1 Den. 310. It has been held that the question whether an answer would have this tendency is to be determined by the oath of the witness; 17 Jur. 898. And in point of fact, out of the necessity of the case, it is a matter which the witness may be said practically to decide for himself. The witness may answer if he chooses; and if he do answer after having been advised of his privileges, he must answer in full; and his answer may be used in evidence against him for all purposes; 1 Greenl. Ev. §§ 451, 453; 4 Wend. 252; 11 Cush. 487; 12 Vt. 491; 20 N. H. 540. It is held that a defendant who voluntarily offers himself as a witness on his own behalf waives this privilege of refusing to answer a question because it may tend to criminate him; 98 N. C. 599. The objection that the answer may tend to criminate can only be made by the witness himself; 16 Colo. 250. See 28 Fla. 90.

Whether a witness be compellable to answer to his own degradation or infamy is a point as to which some distinctions are to be taken: a witness cannot refuse to testify simply because his answer would tend to disgrace him; it must be seen to have that effect certainly and directly; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 456. He cannot, it would seem, refuse to give testimony which is material and relevant to the issue, for the reason that it would disgrace him, or expose him to civil liability. A witness is not the sole judge whether a question put to him, if answered, may tend to criminate him. The court must see from the circumstances of the case that there is reasonable ground to apprehend danger to the witness from his being compelled to answer, in order to excuse him. But if the fact once appear that the witness is in danger, great latitude will be allowed him in judging for himself the effect of any particular question; 26 Ch. Div. 294; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 454; 1 Mood. & M. 108; 4 Wend. 250; 2 Ired. 846. See 8 Misc. Rep. 159. A witness may, however, be compelled to testify concerning his criminal acts, when prosecution therefor is barred; 66 Vt. 302; but only after it is shown affirmatively that no prosecution is pending against him; 43 N. E. Rep. (Ill.) 781.

But it would appear that he may refuse where the question (being one put on cross-examination) is not relevant and material, and does not in any way affect the credit of the witness; 3 Camp. 519; 13 N. H. 93; 1 Gray 108. Whether a witness, when a question is put on the cross-examination which is not relevant and material to the issue, yet goes to affect his credit, will be protected in refusing to answer, simply on the ground that his answer would have a direct and certain effect to disgrace him, is a matter not clearly agreed upon. There is good reason to hold that a witness should be compelled to answer in such a case; 1 Stark. Ev. 144; 1 C. & P. 85; 2 Swanst. 216; 2 Camp. 637; 8 Yeates 439. But the whole matter is one that is largely subject to the discretion of the courts; 1 Greenl. Ev. §§ 481, 449.

There seems no doubt that a witness is in no case competent to allege his own turpitude, or to give evidence which involves his own infamy or impeaches his most solemn acts, if he be otherwise qualified to testify; Stark. Ev. 1737. See 15 Cent. L. J. 848.

The privilege given by the 5th amendment to the constitution, that no person shall be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself, extends to a proceeding before a grand jury; 142 U. S. 847. The provision of the Interstate Commerce Commission Act, compelling parties to testify even though the evidence may tend to criminate them, is not in conflict with the fifth amendment, since the statute itself protects them from punishment; 161 U. S. 591, affirming 70 Fed. Rep. 46; Field, Gray, Shiras, and White, JJ., dissenting. See INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION.

The course of examination is, first, a direct examination by the party producing the witness; then, if desired, a cross-examination by the adverse party, and a re-examination by the party producing; 1 Starkie, Ev. 128, 129. As to the direct examination, the general rule is that leading questions, i. e. such as suggest the answer expected or desired, cannot be put to a witness by the party producing him. But this rule has some reasonable exceptions; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 434. See 35 Neb. 351; 97 Ala. 681; as, where a witness is hostile, leading questions are proper; 43 Ill. App. 160; 62 Mich. 451; also when the answers of a witness have taken by surprise the party calling him; 154 U. S. 184. A court of error will not reverse because a leading question was allowed; 87 Pa. 124; 22 N. J. 372; 8 Allen 466; 139 Ill. 644; 1 Misc. Rep. 354; contra, 90 Ill. 368. As the allowance of leading questions is largely in the discretion of the trial judge, the appellate court will reverse for such cause only where there has been an abuse of discretion; 91 Mich. 611. See 75 Hun 17; 85 Wis. 615; 91 Ga. 819; 154 U. S. 184; 53 Mo. App. 102; 75 Ia. 742. See LEADING QUESTION.

Leading questions, however, are allowed upon cross-examination. See, generally, CROSS-EXAMINATION.

The right of re-examination extends to all topics upon which a witness has been cross-examined; but the witness cannot at this stage, without permission of the court, be questioned as to any new facts unconnected with the subject of the cross-examination and not tending to explain it; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 467.

But the court may in all cases permit a witness to be called either for further examination in chief, or for further cross-examination; Steph. Ev. art. 126; and may itself recall a witness at any stage of the proceedings, and examine or cross-examine, at its discretion; 6 C. & P. 658. If new matter is introduced on the re-examination, by permission of the court, the adverse party may further cross-examine upon that matter; Steph. Ev. art. 127.

A party cannot impeach the credit of his own witness. But he is sometimes, in cases of hardship, permitted to contradict him by other testimony; 1 Stark. Ev. 147; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 442. And a party bona fide surprised at the unexpected testimony of his witness may be permitted to interrogate him, as to previous declarations alleged to have been made by him inconsistent with his testimony, the object being to prove the witness's recollection, and to lead him, if mistaken, to review what he has said; 1 Whart. Ev. § 549. See infra.

The credit of an adversary's witness may be impeached by cross-examination, or by general evidence affecting his reputation for veracity (but not by evidence of particular facts which otherwise are irrelevant and immaterial), and by evidence of his having said or done something before which is inconsistent with his evidence at the trial. Also, of course, he may be contradicted by other testimony; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 401. But he cannot be contradicted as to collateral and irrelevant matter on which he was cross-examined; 68 Miss. 196; 75 Cal. 108; 73 Ia. 67; 39 Kan. 115; 97 N. C. 443; 58 Ark. 125. In some states evidence may be given of a witness's general reputation (q. v.); 4 Wend. 257; 2 Dev. 209; 115 Mo. 419. See 29 Mich. 173; 97 id. 484. But the testimony of a witness cannot be impeached by evidence of particular crimes; 98 Ala. 45; nor can a woman be impeached by evidence of the lack of chastity; 94 Mich. 680. See IMPEACHMENT.

In order to test a witness's accuracy, veracity, or credibility, he may be cross-examined as to "his relations to either of the parties or the subject-matter in dispute; his interest, his motives, his way of life, his associations, his habits, his prejudices, his physical defects and infirmities, his mental idiosyncrasies, if they affect his capacity; his means of knowledge and powers of discernment, memory, and description—may all be revelant." May's Steph. Ev. art. 129. But it has been said that questions otherwise irrelevant cannot be asked for the purpose of testing his moral sense; 4 Cush. 593. He cannot be discredited by asking him if he has not been impeached as a witness upon the trial of another action; 76 Cal. 192.

Generally, where proof is to be offered that a witness has said or done something inconsistent with his evidence, a foundation must first be laid and an opportunity for explanation offered, by asking the witness himself whether he has not said or done what it is proposed to prove, specifying particulars of time, place, and person; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 462; 2 Br. & B. 313; 16 How. 88; 76 Pa. 63; 132 U. S. 394; 98 N. C. 708; 97 Mo. 185; 77 Ga. 781; 23 Neb. 683; 74 La. 623; 80 Ala. 110; 137 U. S. 507; but in other cases it has been held that no foundation need first be laid; 17 Mass. 160; 68 Mo. 35; 22 Conn. 622; 31 Vt. 442. Such statements made on other occasions must be material to the cause; 32 W. Va. 177. Statements introduced for contradictions must be those of the witness; 160 U. S. 70. The failure to lay a proper foundation cannot avail on appeal, where it was apparent that the witness understood the occasion referred to and had full opportunity to explain deficiencies; 83 Fed. Rep. 147.

In England and Massachusetts, by statute, the same course may be taken with a witness on his examination in chief, if the judge is of opinion that he is hostile to the party by whom he was called, and permits the question. A part from statute such evidence has not generally been considered as admissible; May's Steph. Ev. art. 131; 56 N. Y. 585; 49 Cal. 384; if the sole effect is to discredit; but if the purpose be to show the witness he is in error, it is admissible; 15 Ad. & E. 378; 53 N. Y. 230.

Proof of declarations made by a witness out of court in corroboration of the testimony given by him at the trial is, as a general rule, inadmissible. See 83 Ala. 5; 27 Tex. App. 847. But when a witness is charged with having been actuated by some motive prompting him to a false statement, or that the story is a recent fabrication, it may be shown that he made similar statements before any such motive existed; 68 Ill. 514; 48 Cal. 85; 11 How. 480; 74 Cal. 1. See 98 N. C. 629; 103 id. 419.

Evidence of general good reputation may be offered to support a witness, whenever his credit is impeached, either by general evidence affecting his reputation, or on cross-examination; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 469; 77 Ga. 563.

A party cannot attack the credibility of his own witness in the case, even after he has become the witness of his adversary; 5 So. Rep. (Ala.) 829; except where the witness does not testify as he did on the preparatory examination and his testimony is unfavorable; 42 Ill. App. 178; 151 U. S. 308; the contradiction of such witness may be allowed; 79 Ga. 605; 111 N. C. 814.

MODIFICATIONS OF THE COMMON LAW. There have been various important modifications of the common law as to witnesses, in respect of their competency and otherwise, as well in England as in this country. A general and strong tendency is manifest to do away with the old objections to the competency of witnesses, and to admit all persons to testify that can furnish any relevant and material evidence,—leaving these to judge of the credibility of the witnesses. Such is the law and practice in most English and American jurisdictions. The statutes vary in their terms, and the decisions should be read in connection with them.

WITNESS, HOSTILE. See HOSTILE WITNESS.

WITNESS. See INCRIMINATION; ULTRONEOUS WITNESS.

WITWORD. Witword is explained in Anglo-Saxon dictionaries as applying to testaments and bequests, but the word is a peculiar and well-authenticated Northern term made out to mean a legally allowed claim, more especially the right to vindicate ownership or possession by one's affirmation under oath. Vinogradoff, 9.

WOLF'S HEAD. In Old English Law. See CAPUT LUPINUM.

WOMAN'S SUFFRAGE. See CONSTITUTION OF THE UNITED STATES, Nineteenth Amendment.

WOMEN. All the females of the human species. All such females who have arrived at the age of puberty. Mulieris appellatione etiam virgo viri potens continetur. Dig. 50. 16. 13.

A woman by the fact of marriage invests herself with the nationality of her husband; 13 Op. Att. Gen. 128; 14 id. 402; contra, 2 Knapp, P. C. 384. See DOMICIL.

Single or unmarried women have all the civil rights of men; they may, therefore, enter into contracts or engagements; sue and be sued; be trustees or guardians; they may be witnesses, and may for that purpose attest all papers; but they are, generally, not possessed of any political power; and are not as citizens eligible to public office or entitled to vote; 16 How. 287; 21 Wall. 162; but in many of the states they may vote at school elections as in Colorado, Montana, the Dakotas, Idaho, Wisconsin, Massachusetts, Illinois, Kansas, Nebraska, Washington, and Wyoming.

As to the right of a woman to practise law, see ATTORNEY.

If the constitution of a state prevents a woman from being a member of a school committee, it must be by force of some express provision thereof or else by necessary implication arising from the nature of the office itself; 115 Mass. 602; and where an office is created and regulated by statute and the constitution confers upon the general court authority to name and settle all civil officers within the commonwealth, the election and constitution of whom are not otherwise provided for in the constitution, a woman may fill a local office of an administrative character; id.; but see 83 Ky. 464, where it was held that when a woman is excluded from the right to vote for any particular office, she is also excluded from the right to hold the office voted for. In California they may pursue any lawful business or profession; Cons. of Cal. art. 20, § 18. In Illinois, a woman may be a master in chancery; 99 Ill. 501; and in Iowa, a county recorder; Laws of 1890, c. 40. See 25 Alb. L. J. 104. In Colorado, a deputy clerk; 11 Colo. 191; a policeman; 19 Co. Ct. Rep. (Pa.) 657.

It has been held that a woman may not be a justice of the peace; 107 Mass. 604; 62 Me. 506; or a jailer; 83 Ky. 457; or a superintendent of a medical hospital for the insane; 29 Ohio St. 847; or a member of a board of workhouse directors; 4 Ohio C. C. 329 (contra, 136 Mass. 578); or county superintendent of schools; 29 Ore. 464 (contra, 13 Wash. 360; 115 Mass. 602; 16 Kan. 601; 33 Minn. 345); or school director; 89 S. W. Rep. (Mo.) 81; or a notary public; 51 N. E. Rep. (Ohio) 135; 150 Mass. 586. In England a woman may be elected to the office of sexton; 7 Mod. 263; or governor of a workhouse; 2 Ld. Raym. 1014; or overseer; 2 Term 395; or a commissioner of sewers; 13 Vin. Abr. 169; but a woman is not entitled to vote at elections for members of parliament; 38 L. J. C. P. 25; Whart. Lex.; Morse on Citizenship; she may act as postmistress in the United States. See MARRIED WOMAN; NATURALIZATION; 38 L. R. A. 208.

WOODGELD. In Old English Law. To be free from the payment of money for taking of wood in any forest. Co. Litt. 233 a. The same as PUZZELD.

WOODMOTE. The court of attachment. Cowel.

WOODS. A piece of land on which forest-trees in great number naturally grow. According to Lord Coke, a grant to another of omnes boscos suos, all his woods, will pass not only all his trees, but the land on which they grow. Co. Litt. 4 b. See 72 Me. 459. A field grown up in wire-grass surrounded by a fence and used for pasturing is not a woods. 84 N. Car. 364; but see 5 Jones 4. See TIMBER; SALE.

WOODWARD. An official who looked after the vert, venison and wood in a forest. He was permitted to carry the weapon known as a forest bill, but not a bow and arrows. Byrne.

WOOL. The word "Merino" as applied to wool "means primarily and popularly" a fine long-staple wool, which commands the highest price. The words "Australian wool" mean a distinct commodity, a fine grade of wool grown in Australia. The word "wool" when used as an adjective means made of wool. The word "worsted" means primarily and popularly a yarn or fabric made wholly of wool. A substantial part of the consuming public, and also some buyers for retailers and sales people, understand the words "Merino," "Natural Merino," "Gray Merino," "Natural Wool," "Gray Wool," "Australian Wool," and "Natural Worsted," to mean all wool. 258 U. S. 491.

WOOLSACK. The seat of the lord chancellor in the house of lords, being a large square bag of wool, without back or arms, covered with red cloth. The judges, king's counsel-at-law, and masters in chancery sit also on woolsacks. The custom arose from wool being a staple of Great Britain from early times. Encyc. Amer.

WORDS.

In a Will. Remote explanation as to the use and meaning of a word will be rejected when the will offers upon its face a different and more obvious one. 201 U. S. 371. See EFFECT OF WORDS; NOSCITUR A SOCIIS; USE OF WORD.

Actionable Per Se. At common law, "actionable words per se" were such as imported a felony. 78 Ky. 118. See ACTIONABLE PER SE.

See GENERAL WORDS; CONSTRUCTION; INTERPRETATION; LIBEL; SLANDER.

WORDS OF LIMITATION. See LIMIT.

WORK. (v.) To 'work' a mining claim is to do something toward making it productive, such as developing or extracting an ore body after it has been discovered. 252 U. S. 307.

WORK AND LABOR. In actions of assumpsit it is usual to put in a count, commonly called a common count, for work and labor done and material furnished by the plaintiff for the defendant; and when the work was not done under a special contract the plaintiff will be entitled to recover on the common count for work, labor, and materials. 4 Tyrwh. 43; 2 Carr. & M. 214. See ASSUMPSIT; QUANTUM MERUIT.

WORKHOUSE. A prison where prisoners are kept in employment; a penitentiary. A house where the poor are taken care of and kept in employment.

WORKING CONTRACT. See BUILDING CONTRACT.

WORKING DAYS. Working days include all days except Sundays and legal holidays and do not include days on which, by the custom of the port, baymen stop work on the day of the funeral of one of their deceased members; 84 Fed. Rep. 688. In settling laydays, or days of demurrage, sometimes the contract specifies "working days"; in the computation, Sundays and custom-house holidays are excluded; 1 Bell, Com. 577. See DEMURRAGE; LAY-DAYS. Running or calendar days on which the law permits work to be done. The term excludes Sundays and legal holidays, but not stormy days; 2 U. S. App. 297; 14 Fed. Rep. 422; 20 id. 144; 19 id. 459.

Working or lay-days. by the general rule, do not commence until the vessel has arrived at the usual place for unloading; 1 H. & C. 388. But where such place is a dock, it has been held that they begin when she enters the dock, and not when she reaches her place of discharge in the dock; 1 Bing. N. C. 383. The parties may, however, stipulate as they please as to the time when they shall commence; 5 Bing. N. C. 71. And it sometimes depends on the usage of the port; 24 E. L. & Eq. 305. Usage, however, cannot be admitted to vary the express terms of the contract; Pars. Ship. & Adm. 313. See DEMURRAGE; LAY-DAYS.

WORKMAN. One who labors; one who is employed to do business for another. See MASTER AND SERVANT.

WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACTS. Acts providing for the compensation of a workman by his employer in case of accident, conferring on the workman the right to compensation for injury received, whether negligence on the part of the employer is proved or not. Stand. Dict.

Various states have many different provisions concerning employments covered. It is practically impossible to make a general statement about this phase of the acts and it is difficult to even group them with any degree of accuracy. The statute of each State must be examined to determine whether acceptance of the act in a particular employment is compulsory or elective or whether the employment is specifically exempted from the operation of the law.

In a number of States only the hazardous employments are directly subject to the act, but in most of those States the non-subject employer can agree with the employees to accept its provisions. Dosker's Manual Compensation Law 1917, 3.

In a majority of the States having these laws, all employments are subject to the act unless they are especially exempted. Generally domestic, agricultural and casual employments are excepted, and often those having less than a stipulated number of employees. Id.

The acts generally exclude employments when the laws of the United States have provided a rule of liability for injuries received in them. Thus accidents to employees of railroads engaged in interstate commerce are not within the acts. But in some States employees engaged in an interstate business are covered if the act by which the injury was received was of a purely intrastate nature. Id. 4. See INSURANCE.

WORKMEN'S INDUSTRIAL INSURANCE. See INSURANCE.

WORSHIP. Honor and homage rendered to God. 59 N. H. 536. See CHRISTIANITY; DISTURBANCE OF PUBLIC WORSHIP; RELIGION.

In English Law. A title or addition given to certain persons. Co. 2d Inst. 666; Bacon, Abr. Misnomer (A 2).

WORSTED. See WOOL.

WORTHIEST OF BLOOD. An expression used to designate that in descent the sons are to be preferred to daughters, which is the law of England. See some singular reasons given for this, in Plowd. 305.

WOULD, COULD. The substitution of "would" for "could" in an instruction to the jury in this case held not to have affected the minds of the jurors. 218 U. S. 87.

WOUND. Any lesion of the body. In this it differs from the meaning of the word when used in surgery. The latter only refers to a solution of continuity; while the former comprises not only these, but also every other kind of accident, such as bruises, contusions, fractures, dislocations, and the like. Cooper, Surg. Dict.; Dunglison, Med. Dict.

Under the statute 9 Geo. IV. c. 31, s. 13, it has been held in England that to make a wound, in criminal cases, there must be an injury to the person by which the skin is broken; 8 C. & P. 684. See DEATH.

WOUNDING. The offense of inflicting a wound. An aggravated species of battery, consisting in giving another some dangerous hurt. 3 Bl. Com. 121.

WRECK (called in law Latin wreccum maris, and in law French wrec de mer).

Such goods as after a shipwreck are cast upon the land by the sea, and left there within some country so as not to belong to the jurisdiction of the admiralty, but to the common law. Co. 2d Inst. 167; 1 Bla. Com. 290. A ship becomes a wreck when, in consequence of injuries received, she is rendered absolutely unseaworthy, or unable to pursue her voyage, without repairs exceeding the half of her value; 6 Mass. 479. A sunken vessel is not a wreck, but derelict; wreck applies to property cast upon land by the sea; 7 N. Y. 555; 38 Fed. Rep. 503. See SUNKEN WRECK.

Goods found at low water, between high and low water mark, and goods between the same limits partly resting on the ground, but still moved by the water, are wreck; 8 Hagg. Adm. 257, 294. Wreck, by the common law, belongs to the king or his grantee; but if claimed by the true owner within a year and a day the goods, or their proceeds, must be restored to him, by virtue of stat. Westm. I., 3 Edw. I. c. 4. Ships and goods found derelict or abandoned at sea belonged until lately to the office of the lord high admiral, by a grant from the crown, but now belong to the national exchequer, subject, however, to be claimed by the true owner within a year and a day; 1 Hagg. 383.

But in America the king's right in the sea-shore was transferred to the colonies, and therefore wreck cast on the sea-shore belongs to the owner of the shore, as against a mere stranger, if not reclaimed; 13 Pick. 255. See, also, 113 Mass. 377.

In this country, the several states bordering on the sea have enacted laws providing for the safekeeping and disposition of property wrecked on the coast. In one case, it was held that the United States succeeded to the prerogative of the British crown, and are entitled to derelict ships or goods found at sea and unclaimed by the true owner; but in the southern district of Florida it is held that such derelicts, in the absence of any act of congress on the subject, belong to the finder or salvor, subject to the claim of the true owner for a year and a day. Marv. Wreck. Stealing from a wrecked or distressed ship, etc., wilfully obstructing the escape of any person endeavoring to save his life therefrom, showing false lights, or extinguishing any true one, with intention to bring any vessel, etc., into danger, distress, or shipwreck, are made felony, punishable by fine and imprisonment, by act of congress of March 3, 1825; R. S. § 5358; 12 Pet. 72. Wrecked goods upon a sale or other act of voluntary importation become liable to duties; 9 Cra. 387. See SALVAGE; TOTAL LOSS.

WRIT. A mandatory precept, issued by the authority and in the name of the sovereign or the state, for the purpose of compelling the defendant to do something therein mentioned.

It is issued by a court or other competent jurisdiction, and is returnable to the same. It is to be under seal and tested by the proper officer, and is directed to the sheriff or other officer lawfully authorized to execute the same. Writs are divided into—original, of mesne process, of execution. See 3 Bla. Com. 273; Gould, Pl. c. 2, s. 1.

The list of original writs was not the reasoned scheme of a provident legislator, calmly devising apt remedies for all conceivable wrongs, rather it was the outcome of the long and complicated struggle whereby the king drew into his court all the litigation of the realm. The statute of Westminster 2d (1285) allowed the chancery to vary the old forms so as to suit new cases, but only new cases which fall under old law.

This gave in time one new form of action—trespass upon the special case—and this again threw out branches which came to be considered distinct forms of action, namely, assumpsit and trover. Equity, again, met some of the new wants, but others had to be met by a stretching and twisting of the old forms which were made to serve many purposes for which they were not originally intended; Poll. Torts, 5th ed. 535, note by F. W. Maitland; and see 3 Harv. L. Rev. 217. As to the history of assumpsit, see 2 Harv. L. Rev. 1, 53, by Prof. J. B. Ames. See WESTMINSTER 2D, STATUTE OF; CONCURRENT.

WRIT DE BONO ET MALO. See DE BONO ET MALO; ASSIZE.

WRIT DE CERTIFICANDO. A writ for certifying, or requiring a thing to be certified. A species of certiorari (q. v.). Burrill.

WRIT DE CONTUMACE CAPIENDO. See DE CONTUMACE CAPIENDO.

WRIT DE EJECTIONE CUSTODIAE. See EJECTIONE CUSTODIAE.

WRIT DE HÆRETICO COMBURENDO. See DE HÆRETICO COMBURENDO.

WRIT DE HOMINE REPLEGIANDO. See DE HOMINE REPLEGIANDO.

WRIT DE ODIO ET ATIA. See DE ODIO ET ATIA; ASSIZE.

WRIT DE PROCEDENDO, AD JUDICIUM. See PROCEDENDO.

WRIT DE RATIONABILI PARTE BONORUM. A writ which was sued out by a widow when the executors of her deceased husband refused to let her have a third part of her late husband's goods, after the debts were paid. Fitzh. N. B. 284.

WRIT OF ASSISTANCE. A writ issuing out of chancery in pursuance of an order, commanding the sheriff to eject the defendant from certain lands and to put the plaintiff in possession. Cowel; 8 Steph. Com. 602; 18 Ill. 67. An ancient writ issuing out of the exchequer. Moz. & W.

A writ issuing from the court of exchequer to the sheriff commanding him to be in aid of the king's tenants by knight's service, or the king's collectors, debtors, or accountants, to enforce payment of their own dues, in order to enable them to pay their own dues to the king. 1 Madox, Hist. Exch. 675.

A writ commanding the sheriff to assist a receiver, sequestrator, or other party in chancery to get possession of land withheld from him by another party to the suit. Quincy, Mass. Appx.; 2 Dan. Ch. Pr. 1062.

These writs which issue from the equity side of the court of exchequer or from any court of chancery are at least as old as the reign of James I., and were formerly in common use in England, Ireland, and some of the United States; 1 Ves. 454; 3 Swanst. 299, n.; but whether from the odium attached to the name in Massachusetts or from the practice in that state to conform processes in equity to those at law, no instance is known of such a writ having been issued in that commonwealth. Quincy, Mass. Appx. 369.

A writ of assistance is founded on the general principle that a court of equity will, when it can do so justly, carry its own decrees into full execution without relying on the co-operation of any other tribunal; 27 N. J. Eq. 452, where it was remarked that it was of comparatively recent use in that state, the first instance being in 1858. It can issue only against parties affected by the decree; 101 U. S. 549; the right to it may be lost by laches; 69 Ala. 484. The order granting this writ is not appealable; 8 MacArthur 402.

It will not issue in favor of a purchaser at an execution sale, where there is a bona fide contest as to the right of possession; 71 Wis. 585.

Writs of assistance to seize uncustomed goods were introduced by statute 12 Charles II., c. 19, and were perhaps copied from the sheriff's patent of assistance; 4 Doug. 347; these writs authorized the person to whom they were issued, with the assistance of the sheriff, justice of the peace, or constable, to enter into any house where the goods were suspected to be concealed. One acting under this writ and finding nothing was not justified; 4 Doug. 347. See Quincy, Mass. Rep. Appx.; 1 Thayer, Cas. Const. L.; 2 Dan. Ch. Pr. 1063.

WRIT OF ASSOCIATION. In English Practice. A writ whereby certain persons (usually the clerk of assize and his subordinate officers) are directed to associate themselves with the justices and sergeants; and they are required to admit the said persons into their society in order to take the assizes. 3 Bla. Com. 59. See ASSIZE.

WRIT OF CONSPIRACY. The name of an ancient writ now superseded by the more convenient remedy of an action on the case, which might have been sued against parties guilty of a conspiracy. Fitzh. N. B. 260.

It did not lie at common law, in any case, except when the conspiracy was to indict the party either of treason or felony; all the other cases of conspiracy in the books were but actions on the case; 7 Hill N. Y. 104.

WRIT OF COVENANT. A writ which lies where a party claims damages for breach of covenant, i. e. of a promise under seal.

WRIT OF DEBT. A writ which lies where the party claims the recovery of a debt, i. e. a liquidated or certain sum of money alleged to be due to him.

This is debt in the debt, which is the principal and only common form. There is another species mentioned in the books, called the debt in the detinet, which lies for the specific recovery of goods under a contract to deliver them. 1 Chitty, Pl. 101.

WRIT OF DECEIT. The name of a writ which lies where one man has done anything in the name of another, by which the latter is damaged and deceived. Fitzh. N. B. 217.

The modern practice is to sue a writ of trespass on the case to remedy the injury. See DECEIT.

WRIT OF DETINUE. See DETINUE.

WRIT OF DOWER. A writ which lies for a widow claiming the specific recovery of her dower, no part having been yet assigned to her. It is usually called a writ of dower unde nihil habet. 3 Chitty, Pl. 393. There is another species, called a writ of right of dower, which applies to the particular case where the widow has received a part of her dower from the tenant himself; and of land lying in the same town in which she claims the residue. This latter writ is seldom used in practice. See DOWER.

WRIT OF EJECTMENT. See EJECTMENT.

WRIT OF ENTRY. See ENTRY, WRIT OF.

WRIT OF ERROR. A writ issued out of a court of competent jurisdiction, directed to the judges of a court of record in which final judgment has been given, and commanding them, in some cases, themselves to examine the record, in others to send it to another court of appellate jurisdiction, therein named, to be examined, in order that some alleged error in the proceedings may be corrected. Steph.

Pl. 138; 2 Saund. 100, n. 1; Bac. Abr. Error.

The first is called a writ of error coram vobis or vobis. When an issue in fact has been decided, there is not, in general, any appeal except by motion for a new trial; and although a matter of fact should exist which was not brought into the issue, as, for example, if the defendant neglected to plead a release, which he might have pleaded, this is no error in the proceedings, though a mistake of the defendant; Steph. Pl. *118. But there are some facts which affect the validity and regularity of the proceeding itself; and to remedy these errors the party in interest may sue out the writ of error coram vobis. The death of one of the parties at the commencement of the suit, the appearance of an infant in a personal action by an attorney and not by guardian, the coverture of either party at the commencement of the suit, when her husband is not joined with her, are instances of this kind; 1 Saund. 101; Steph. Pl. *119; 1 Brown, Pa. 75. The writ of error coram vobis is used to correct errors of fact and not of law; 37 Ill. App. 311.

The second species is called, generally, writ of error, and is the more common. Its object is to review and correct an error of the law committed in the proceedings, which is not amendable or cured at common law or by some of the statutes of amendment or jeofail. See, generally, 1 Vern. 169; 1 Salk. 322; 2 Saund. 46, 101; 3 Bla. Com. 405.

It lies only to remove causes from a court of record. It is in the nature of a suit or action when it is to restore the party who obtains it to the possession of anything which is withheld from him, not when its operation is entirely defensive; 3 Story, Const. § 1721. And it is considered, generally, as a new action; 15 Ala. 9.

If a writ of error can ever be issued nunc pro tunc, after the lapse of the time allowed by law for bringing suits in error, the default must be attributable solely to official delinquency; 32 Fla. 273.

A party cannot pursue the remedies of appeal and writ of error simultaneously. He is not entitled to his writ of error at least until the appeal is dismissed; 30 Mo. App. 503.

A writ of error does not vacate the judgment of the court below; that continues in force until reversed; 100 U. S. 81. See APPEAL; BILL OF EXCEPTION.

WRIT OF EXECUTION. A writ to put in force the sentence that the law has given. See EXECUTION.

WRIT OF EXIGIFACIAS. See EXIGENT; EXIGI FACIAS; OUTLAWRY.

WRIT OF FORMEDON. This writ lies where a party claims the specific recovery of lands and tenements as issue in tail, or as remainder-man or reversioner, upon the determination of an estate in tail. Co. Litt. 236 b. See FORMEDON.

WRIT OF INQUIRY. See INQUISITION; INQUEST.

WRIT OF MAINPRISE. A writ directed to the sheriff (either generally, when any man is imprisoned for a bailable offence and bail has been refused, or specially, when the offence or cause of commitment is not properly bailable below), commanding him to take sureties for the prisoner's appearance, commonly called mainprisors, and to set him at large. 3 Bla. Com. 128. See MAINPRISE.

WRIT OF MANDAMUS. See MANDAMUS.

WRIT OF MESNE. In Old English Law. A writ which was so called by reason of the words used in the writ, namely, Unde idem A qui medius est inter C et prefatum B; that is, A, who is mesne between C, the lord paramount, and B, the tenant paravail. Co. Litt. 100 a.

WRIT OF PRÆCIPUE. This writ is also called a writ of covenant, and is sued out by the party to whom lands are to be conveyed by fine,—the foundation of which is a supposed agreement or covenant that the one shall convey the land to the other. 2 Bla. Com. 349.

WRIT OF PREVENTION. This name is given to certain writs which may be issued in anticipation of suits which may arise. Co. Litt. 100. See QUIA TIMET.

WRIT OF PRIVILEGE. See PRIVILEGE, WRIT OF.

WRIT OF PROCESS. See PROCESS; ACTION.

WRIT OF PROCLAMATION. A writ which issues at the same time with the exigi facias, by virtue of stat. 31 Eliz. c. 3, s. 1, by which the sheriff is commanded to make proclamations in the statute prescribed.

When it is not directed to the same sheriff as the writ of exigi facias is, it is called a foreign writ of proclamation. 4 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law 261.

WRIT OF PROHIBITION. See PROHIBITION.

WRIT OF QUARE IMPEDIT. See QUARE IMPEDIT.

WRIT OF RECAPTION. A writ which lies where, pending an action of replevin, the same distrainer takes, for the same supposed cause, the cattle or goods of the same distrainee. See Fitzh. N. B. 169.

This writ is nearly obsolete, as trespass, which is found to be a preferable remedy, lies for the second taking; and, as the defendant cannot justify, the plaintiff must necessarily recover damages proportioned to the injury.

WRIT OF REPLEVIN. See REPLEVIN.

WRIT OF RESTITUTION. A writ which is issued on the reversal of a judgment commanding the sheriff to restore to the defendant below the thing levied upon, if it has not been sold, and, if it has been sold, the proceeds. See RESTITUTION.

WRIT OF RIGHT. The remedy appropriate to the case where a party claims the specific recovery of corporeal hereditaments in fee-simple, founding his title on the right of property, or mere right, arising either from his own seisin or the seisin of his ancestor or predecessor. Fitzh. N. B. 1 (B); 3 Bla. Com. 391.

At common law, a writ of right lies only against the tenant of the freehold demanded; 8 Cra. 239.

This writ brings into controversy only the rights of the parties in the suit; and a defence that a third person has better title will not avail; 7 Wheat. 27; 3 Pet. 133; 3 Bingh. N. S. 434; 6 Ad. & E. 103.

WRIT OF SUMMONS. See SUMMONS.

WRIT OF TOLL. In English Law. The name of a writ to remove proceedings on a writ of right patent from the court-baron into the county court. 3 Bla. Com. App. No. 1, § 2.

WRIT OF TRIAL. In English Law. A writ directing an action brought in a superior court to be tried in an inferior court or before the under-sheriff, under stat. 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 42. It is now superseded by the County Courts Act of 1887, c. 142, s. 6, by which a defendant in certain cases is enabled to obtain an order that the action be tried in a county court; 8 Steph. Com. 515, n.

WRIT OF WASTE. The name of a writ to be issued against a tenant who has committed waste of the premises. See WASTE.

WRIT PRO RETORNO HABENDO. In Practice. The name of a writ which recites that the defendant was summoned to appear to answer the plaintiff in a plea whereof he took the cattle of the said plaintiff (specifying them), and that the said plaintiff afterwards made default, wherefore it was then considered that the said plaintiff and his pledges of prosecuting should be in mercy, and that the said defendant should go without day, and that he should have return of the cattle aforesaid. It then commands the sheriff that he should cause to be returned the cattle aforesaid to the said defendant without delay, etc. 2 Sell. Pr. 168.

WRITER OF THE TALLIES. In England. An officer of the exchequer whose duty it was to write upon the tallies the letters of tellers' bills. The office has long been abolished. See TALLY.

WRITERS TO THE SIGNET. In Scotch Law. Anciently, clerks in the office of the secretary of state, by whom writs passing the king's signet were prepared. Their duty now is to prepare the warrants of all lands flowing from the crown, and to sign almost all diligencies of the law affecting the person or estate of a debtor, or for compelling implement of decree of superior court. They may act as attorneys or agents before the court of sessions and have various privileges. Bell, Dict. Clerk to Signet.

WRITING. The act of forming by the hand letters or characters of a particular kind, on paper or other suitable substance, and artfully putting them together so as to convey ideas.

The word "writing," when not used in connection with analogous words of more special meaning, is an extensive term, and may be construed to denote a letter from one person to another. But such is not its ordinary and usual acceptation. Neither in legislative enactments nor in common intercourse are the two terms "letter" and "writing" equivalent expressions. In law the term "writing" is much more frequently used to denote legal instruments, such as deeds, agreements, memoranda, bonds, and notes, etc. In the statute of frauds the word occurs in that sense in nearly every section. But in its most frequent and most familiar sense the term "writing" is applied to books, pamphlets, and the literary and scientific productions of authors; 135 U. S. 253.

It differs from printing, which is the formation of words on paper or other proper substance by means of a stamp. Sometimes by writing is understood printing, and sometimes printing and writing mixed.

See 9 Pick. 312. A theatre ticket is the subject of forgery. "Printing" is "writing" in the legal sense of the term, and an instrument, the words of which are printed either wholly or in part, is equally valid with an instrument written by a pen; 34 Fed. Rep. 652; 127 U. S. 467.

Many contracts are required to be in writing; all deeds for real estate must be in writing, for it cannot be conveyed by a contract not in writing, yet it is the constant practice to make deeds partly in printing and partly in writing. Wills, except nuncupative wills, must be in writing, and signed by the testator; and nuncupative wills must be reduced to writing by the witnesses within a limited time after the testator's death.

Records, bonds, bills of exchange, and many other engagements must, from their nature, be made in writing.

The notes of a stenographer, taken when the witness gives his oral testimony in court, is a "taking in writing," as required by a statute; 33 La. Ann. 848.

As to a writing being in lead pencil, see, generally, 45 La. Ann. 631; 188 Pa. 245; 84 Id. 510; 12 Johns. 102; WILL.

See ALTERATION; FORGERY; FRAUDS, STATUTE OF; LANGUAGE; SALE; TYPE-WRITING; STENOGRAPHER.

WRITING OBLIGATORY. A bond; an agreement reduced to writing, by which the party becomes bound to perform something, or suffer it to be done.

WRITTEN INSTRUMENT. A judgment and a tax duplicate have been held not to be written instruments, within the meaning of a statute requiring a copy to be filed with the pleadings; 38 Ind. 48; 89 Id. 172.

WRITTEN LAW. Statute law; law deriving its force from express legislative enactment. 1 Bl. Com. 62, 85.

WRONG. An injury; a tort; a violation of right.

In its broad sense, it includes every injury to another, independent of the motive causing the injury; 36 Kan. 370.

A wrong is an invasion of right to the damage of the party who suffers it. It consists in the injury done, and not commonly in the purpose or mental or physical capacity of the person or agent doing it. It may or may not have been done with bad motive; the question of motive is usually a question of aggravation only; 148 N. Y. 447.

In its most usual sense, wrong signifies an injury committed to the person or property of another, or to his relative rights unconnected with contract; and these wrongs are committed with or without force. But in a more extended signification, wrong includes the violation of a contract; a failure by a man to perform his undertaking or promise is a wrong or injury to him to whom it was made; 3 Bla. Com. 158.

A public wrong is an act which is injurious to the public generally, commonly known by the name of crime, misdemeanor, or offence; and it is punishable in various ways, such as indictments, summary proceedings, and, upon conviction, by death, imprisonment, fine, etc.

Private wrongs, which are injuries to individuals, unafflicting the public; these are redressed by actions for damages, etc. See REMEDIES; TORT.

WRONG-DOER. One who commits an injury; a tort-feasor. See Dane, Abr.

WRONGFUL ACT. The words "wrongful act" held to denote any and all kinds of acts from which negligence could arise. 24 S. W. 619.

WRONGFULLY. In a wrong manner; unjustly; in a manner contrary to the moral law, or to justice. Webster, cited 91 Ind. 538.

WRONGFULLY INTENDING. In Pleading. Words used in a declaration when in an action for an injury the motive of the defendant in committing it can be proved; for then his malicious intent ought to be averred. This is sufficiently done if it be substantially alleged, in general terms, as wrongfully intending. 8 Bouvier, Inst. n. 2875.

WYOMING. One of the states of the United States.

Wyoming became one of the states of the Union by virtue of the act of congress of July 10, 1890. By act of congress, approved July 25, 1888, the territory of Wyoming was constituted. See MONTANA; NEW MEXICO.

X, Y, Z.

X-RAY. While a picture produced by an "X-ray" cannot be verified as a true representation of the subject in the same way that a picture made by a camera can be, the rule in regard to the use of ordinary photographs on the trial of a cause applies to photographs of the internal structure and conditions of the human body taken by the aid of "X-rays" when verified by proof that they are a true representation. 157 Ky. 107, 162 S. W. 536.

Y.

YACHT. A light sea-going vessel for the purpose of pleasure, racing, and the like. See VESSEL. A steam pleasure yacht is an "ocean going vessel" and not a coasting vessel; 150 U. S. 674.

By the act of January 25, 1897, foreign-built yachts thereafter purchased by American citizens are subject to tonnage duties; 166 U. S. 110. See 142 U. S. 479; [1897] A. C. 59; VESSEL; SHIP; NAVIGATION RULES.

YARD. A measure of length, containing three feet, or thirty-six inches.

A piece of land inclosed for the use and accommodation of the inhabitants of a house. In England it is nearly synonymous with backside. 1 Chitty, Pr. 176; 1 Term 701.

YARDLAND. In Old English Law. A quantity of land containing twenty acres. Co. Litt. 69 a.

YEAR. The period in which the revolution of the earth round the sun, and the accompanying changes in the order of nature, are completed.

The civil year differs from the astronomical, the latter being composed of three hundred and sixty-five days, five hours, forty-eight seconds and a fraction, while the former consists sometimes of three hundred and sixty-five days, and at others, in leap-years, of three hundred and sixty-six days.

The year is divided into half-year, which consists, according to Co. Litt. 135 b, of one hundred and eighty-two days; and quarter of a year, which consists of ninety-one days. Id.; 2 Rolle, Abr. 521, l. 40. It is further divided into twelve months.

The civil year commences immediately after twelve o'clock at night of the thirty-first day of December, that is, the first moment of the first day of January, and ends at midnight of the thirty-first day of December twelve months thereafter. See Com. Dig. Annus; 2 Chitty, Bla. Com. 140. Before the alteration of the calendar from old to new style in England (see BISSEXTILE) and the colonies of that country in America, the year in chronological reckoning was supposed to commence with the first day of January, although the legal year did not commence until March 25, the intermediate time being doubly indicated; thus February 15, 1724, and so on. This mode of reckoning was altered by the statute 24 Geo. II. c. 23, which gave rise to an act of assembly of Pennsylvania, passed March 11, 1753, 1 Smith, Laws, 217, conforming thereto, and also to the repeal of the act of 1710.

In New York it is enacted that whenever the term "year" or "years" is or shall be used in any statute, deed, verbal or written contract, or any public or private instrument whatever, the year intended shall be taken to consist of three hundred and sixty-five days; half a year, of a hundred and eighty-two days; and a quarter of a year, of ninety-two days; and the day of a leap year, and the day immediately preceding, if they shall occur in any period so to be computed, shall be reckoned together as one day. Rev. Stat. vol. 2; c. 19, t. 1, § 8. The meaning of the term "year," as used in a contract, is to be determined from the connection in which it is used and the subject-matter of the contract; 77 Cal. 236; 73 Ind. 54. See AGE; ALLOWANCE; TIME; REGNAL YEARS; OLD STYLE.

The omission of the word "year" in an indictment is not important, provided the proper numerals are written after the month and day of the month; 22 Minn. 67. An indictment which states the year of the commission of the offence in figures only, without prefixing "A. D.," is insufficient; 5 Gray 91; but it has been held otherwise in Maine under a statute; 47 Me. 388. See YEAR OF OUR LORD.

YEAR AND DAY. A period of time much recognized in law.

It is not in all cases limited to a precise calendar year. In Scotland, in computing the term, the year and day is to be reckoned, not by the number of days which go to make up a year, but by the return of the day of the next year that bears the same denomination; 1 Bell, Com. 721. See Bac. Abr. Descent (13). In the law of all the Gothic nations, it meant a year and six weeks.

It is a term frequently occurring; for example, in case of an estray, if the owner challenged it not within a year and a day, it belonged to the lord; 5 Co. 108. So of a wreck; Co. 2d Inst. 168. This time is given to prosecute appeals and for actions in a writ of right, and, after entry or claim, to avoid a fine; Plowd. 357 a. And if a person wounded die in that time, it is murder; Co. 3d Inst. 53; 6 Co. 107. So, when a judgment is reversed, a party, notwithstanding the lapse of time mentioned in the statute of limitations pending that action, may commence a fresh action within a year and a day of such reversal; 3 Chitty, Pr. 107. Again, after a year and a day have elapsed from the day of signing a judgment no execution can be issued till the judgment be revived by scire facias; Bac. Abr. Execution (H).

Protection lasted a year and a day; and if a villain remain from his master a year and a day in an ancient demesne, he is free; Cunningham, Dict. If a person is afraid to enter on his land, he may make claim as near as possible,—which is in force for a year and a day; 3 Bla. Com. 175. In case of prize, if no claim is made within a year and a day, the condemnation is to captors as of course; 2 Gall. 388. So, in case of goods saved, the court retains them till claim, if made within a year and a day, but not after that time; 8 Pet. 4.

Coke gives various rules as to the proposition that the common law has often limited year and day as a convenient time. See Co. Litt. 254 b; 5 Rep. 218.

See Possession for Year and Day, by F. W. Maitland, in 5 L. Q. Rev. 253, containing much learning.

The same period occurs in the Civil Law, in the Book of Feuds, the Laws of the Lombards, etc.

YEAR-BOOKS. Books of reports of cases in a regular series (the first one being written in 1292; 1 Poll. & Maitl. 195), from the reign of the English King Edward II., 1292, inclusive, to the time of Henry VIII., which were taken by the prothonotaries or chief scribes of the courts, at the expense of the crown, and published annually—whence their name Year-Books. They consist of eleven parts, namely:—Part 1. Maynard's Reports temp. Edw. II.; also Divers Memoranda of the Exchequer temp. Edward I. Part 2. Reports in the first ten years of Edw. III. Part 3. Reports from 17 to 39 Edward III. Part 4. Reports from 40 to 50 Edward III. Part 5. Liber Amisarum; or, Pleas of the Crown temp. Edw. III. Part 6. Reports temp. Hen. IV. & Hen. V. Parts 7 and 8. Annals; or, Reports of Hen. VI. during his reign, in 2 vols. Part 9. Annals of Edward IV. Part 10. Long Quinto; or, Reports in 5 Edward IV. Part 11. Cases in the reigns of Edward V., Richard III., Henry VII., and Henry VIII. A reference to them by a learned judge as mere "lumber garrets of obsolete feudal law," indicates their practical value in modern times. Wallace, Reporters; 2 Wall. Jr. 809. See REPORTS.

Their usefulness is now, however, considered rather greater than that. Professor Wambaugh (Study of Cases § 98) says they "are the work of skilled lawyers; and the reports of cases, when complete, present an adequate view of the pleadings." They were Court Rolls, intended for the preservation of the results in order to fix the rights of the parties, but not adapted for use as precedents. Id. See 1 Dougl. v; 1 Co. XXVI.

YEAR, DAY, AND WASTE (Lat. annus, dies, et vastum) is a part of king's prerogative, whereby he takes the profits of the lands and tenements of those attainted of petty treason or felony, for a year and a day, but, in the end, may waste the tenements, destroy the houses, root up the woods, gardens, and pasture, and plough up the meadows (except the lord of the fee agree with him for redemption of such waste); after which the lands are to be restored to the lord of the fee. Staundford, Prerog. c. 16, fol. 44. By Magna Charta, it would appear that the profits for a year and a day were given in lieu of the waste. 9 Hen. III. c. 22. But 17 Edw. II. declares the king's right to both.

YEAR OF OUR LORD. In England the time of an offence may be alleged as that of the sovereign's reign, or as that of the year of our Lord. The former is the usual mode. Hence there "year" alone might not indicate the time intended, but as we have no other era, therefore, any particular year must mean that year in our era. 14 Gray 38. The abbreviation A. D. may be omitted; and the word year is not fatal; 47 Me. 393; 22 Mo. 71; contra, 5 Gray 92. See REGNAL YEARS.

YEARS, ESTATE FOR. See ESTATE FOR YEARS.

YEAS AND NAYS. The list of members of a legislative body voting in the affirmative and negative of a proposition.

The constitution of the United States, art. 1, s. 5, directs that "the yeas and nays of the members of either house, on any question, shall, at the desire of one-fifth of those present, be entered on the journal." See 2 Story, Const. 801.

Constitutional provisions in some states require the yeas and nays to be entered on the journal on the final passage of every bill. See 68 Ill. 160; 22 Mich. 104; 54 N. Y. 276. These directions are clearly imperative; Cooley, Const. Lim. 171.

The power of calling the yeas and nays is given by all the constitutions of the several states; and it is not, in general, restricted to the request of one-fifth of the members present, but may be demanded by a less number; and, in some, one member alone has the right to require the call of the yeas and nays.

YEOMAN. In the United States this word does not appear to have any very exact meaning. It is usually put as an addition to the names of parties in declarations and indictments. In England it signifies a free man who has land of the value of forty shillings a year. Co. 2d Inst. 868; 2 Dall. 93. The local volunteer militia raised by individuals with the approbation of the queen are also called yeomen. The term geomanry is applied to the small freeholders and farmers in general. Hallam, Const. Hist. c. 1.

YIELD. To give as claimed of right; to resign.

YIELDING AND PAYING. These words, when used in a lease, constitute a covenant on the part of the lessee to pay the rent; Platt, Cov. 50; 3 Pa. 464; 2 Lev. 206; 3 Term 402; 1 B. & C. 416; 2 Dowl. & R. 670; but whether it be an express covenant or not seems not to be settled; 2 Lev. 206; T. Jones 102; 3 Term 402.

In Pennsylvania, it has been decided to be a covenant running with the land; 3 Pa. 464. See 1 Saund. 233, n. 1; 9 Vt. 191.

YORK-ANTWERP RULES. Certain rules relating to uniform bills of lading formulated by the Association for the Reform and Codification of the Laws of Nations, now the International Law Association.

YORK, CUSTOM OF, is recognized by 22 & 23 Car. II. c. 10, and 1 Jac. II. c. 17. By this custom, the effects of an intestate are divided according to the anciently universal rule of pars rationabilis. 4 Burn, Ecol. Law 342.

YORK, STATUTE OF. The name of an English statute, passed at York, 12 Edw. II. 1318. It contains many wise provisions and explanations of former statutes. Barrington, Stat. 174. There were other statutes made at York in the reign of Edward III., but they do not bear this name.

YOUNG ANIMALS. It is a rule that the young of domestic or tame animals belong to the owner of the dam or mother, according to the maxim, Partus sequitur ventrem. Dig. 6. 1. 5. 2; Inst. 2. 1. 9. See WHELP.

YOUNGER CHILDREN. When used with reference to settlements of land in England, this phrase signifies all such children as are not entitled to the rights of an eldest son, including daughters who are older than the eldest son. Moz. & W.

YOUTH. This word may include children and youth of both sexes. 2 Cush. 519, 528.

Z.

ZAMINDAR, or ZEMINDAR. A landholder in India, who is the responsible collector of revenues on behalf of the government. Wilson's Glos.

ZINC ORE. A mineral body, containing so much of the metal of zinc as to be worth smelting. 55 N. J. L. 850.

ZOLL-VEREIN. A union of German states for uniformity of customs, established in 1819. It continued until the unification of the German Empire, including Prussia, Saxony, Bavaria, Wurtemberg, Baden, Hesse-Cassel, Brunswick, and Mecklenburg-Strelitz, and all intermediate principalities. It has now been superseded by the German Empire; and the Federal Council of the empire has taken the place of that of the Zoll-verein. Whart. Lex. See Miller, Const. 439.

A

A 1. Of highest qualities. An expression which originated in a practice of underwriters of rating vessels in three classes, A, B, and C, and these again in ranks numbered. Abbott.

A and B LISTS. When a limited company is wound up, all present members are liable, in so far as their shares are unpaid, to contribute toward the discharge of the liabilities of the company. Such members form the A list. If their contributions are insufficient, then all who have been members within one year before the date of the winding-up order may be required to contribute to such extent as their shares were unpaid. Such past members form the B list. Byrne.

A. D. In the year of our Lord. See ANNO DOMINI.

A. R. (L. Lat.). Anno Regni. In the year of the reign. English.

A COELO USQUE AD CENTRUM (L. Lat.). From the heavens to the centre of the earth. Rapalje & Lawrence.

A CUEILLETTE. In French Law. The taking of freight on condition that the whole cargo can be completed from other sources. English.

A DIGNIORI FIERI DEBET DENOMINATIO ET RESOLUTIO. The title and exposition of a thing ought to be derived from, or given, or made with reference to the more worthy degree, quality, or species of it. Wingate's Maxims, 265 max. 75. Burrill.

A FINE FORCE (L. Fr.). Of necessity; of pure necessity. Litt. Sect. 455. Burrill.

A FORFAIT ET SANS GARANTIE. A French expression equal to "without recourse." English.

A FOY (L. Fr.). In or under allegiance. Yearb., P. 8 Edw. III. 6. Burrill.

A GRATIA. Out of favor; from mere indulgence and not of right. Anderson. See GRATIS.

A LIBELLIS (L. Lat.). An officer who had charge of the libelli or petitions addressed to the sovereign. Calvin's Lex. Jurid. A name sometimes given to a chancellor (cancellarius) in the early history of that office. Burrill.

A MANIBUS (L. Lat.). An officer who wrote for the emperor; whose hand (manus) was used for writing; an amanuensis. Calvin's Lex. Burrill.

A PALATIO (Lat.). From palatium (a palace). Counties palatine are hence so called. 1 Bl. Com. 117. Burrill.

A PIRATIS ET LATRONIBUS CAPTA DOMINIUM NON MUTANT. Things taken or captured by pirates and robbers do not change their ownership. Bynk. Quast. Jur. Pub. b. 1, c. 17. 1 Kent's Com. 108, 184. Burrill.

A RESPONSIS (L. Lat.). In Ecclesiastical Law. One whose office it was to give or convey answers; otherwise termed responsalis and apocrisiarius. One who, being consulted on ecclesiastical matters, gave answers, counsel, or advice; otherwise termed a consiliis. Spelman voc. Apocrisiarius. Burrill.

A SECRETIS (L. Lat.). An officer who committed to writing or signed orders made in secret council; an officer entrusted with private affairs or secrets of state; a secretary. Calvin's Lex.; Spelman voc. Cancellarius. A name anciently given to a chancellor (cancellarius). Hincmar Epist. 3, c. 16. Burrill.

A SOCIIS. From its associates; from its surroundings; from the context. Anderson. See NOSCITUR.

A TENERIS ANNIS. From tender years; by reason of youth. Anderson. See NEGLIGENCE.

A TORT (L. Fr.). Of, or by, wrong; wrongfully. Yearb. M. 3 Hen. VI. 20. Burrill.

A VERBIS LEGIS NON EST RECEDENDUM. From the words of the law there must be no departure. 5 Co. 119. Wingate's Max. 25. A court is not at liberty to disregard the express letter of a statute in favor of supposed intention. 1 Steph. Com. 71, Broom's Max. 268 (480). Burrill.

AB ABUSU AD USUM NON VALET CONSEQUENTIA. From the abuse of a thing you can draw no conclusion as to its legitimate use. 1 A. & E. 116. Byrne.

AB AGENDO. From acting; incapacitated, by mental or physical weakness or any other cause, for business or transactions of any kind. Abbott.

AB ANTIQUO (Lat.). Of old, anciently. Magna Charta, 9 Hen. III. c. 15; Bract. fol. 76a. 3 Bl. Com. 95. Burrill.

AB ASSUETIS NON FIT INJURIA. From things to which one is accustomed (or in which there has been long acquiescence) no injury arises. Jenk. Cent. Intro. viii. If a person neglect to insist on his right he is deemed to have abandoned it. Ambl. 645; 3 Bro. C. C. 639. Burrill.

AB EPISTOLIS (Lat.). An officer having charge of the correspondence (epistolae) of his superior or sovereign; a secretary. Calvin's Lex. Spiegelius; Burrill.

ABACTION. A carrying away by violence. Abbott.

ABANDONMENT. In Industrial Property. An act by which the public domain originally enters or re-enters into the possession of the thing (commercial name, mark, or sign) by the will of the legitimate owner. The essential condition to constitute abandonment is, that the one having a right should consent to the dispossession. Outside of this there can be no dedication of the right, because there cannot be abandonment in the juridical sense of the word. 221 U. S. 598, quoting De Maragy, International Dictionary of Industrial Property, and citing 163 U. S. 186.

To establish the defence of abandonment it is necessary to show not only acts indicating a practical abandonment, but an actual intent to abandon. Acts which unexplained would be sufficient to establish an abandonment may be answered by showing that there never was an intention to give up and relinquish the right claimed. 221 U. S. 598, quoting 179 U. S. 31.

ABBACIA, ABBATIA (L. Lat.). In Old English Law. An abbey. Magna Charta, 9 Hen. III. c. 33. Burrill.

ABSOLUTE SALE. See CONDITIONAL SALE.

ABSORPTION. Within the Meaning of the Act of May 9, 1902, c. 784, 32 Stat. 193, which defines adulterated butter. Includes the introduction of moisture from the outside and the incorporation of water into the butter, whether it is technically an absorption or not. It does not include moisture originally contained in the cream or butter. The act does not prescribe the amount of moisture permissible nor fix any rule or criterion by which to determine the amount that is deemed "abnormal" or that lawfully may be absorbed and incorporated. 265 U. S. 320. See ADULTERATED BUTTER.

ABUTMENT. The part of a bridge which touches the land. Anderson. See BRIDGE.

ACSI (Lat.). As if. Towns. Pl. 23, 27. These words frequently occur in old English Statutes. Lord Bacon expounds their meaning in the Statute of Uses: "The statute gives entry, not simpliciter, but within an ac si." Bac. Read. Uses, Works IV, 195. Burrill.

ACAPTE (Fr. [L. Lat., accipitum]). In French Feudal Law. A species of relief; a seigniorial right due on every change of a tenant. A feudal right which formerly prevailed in Languedoc and Guyenne, being attached to that species of heritable estates which were granted on the contract of emphyteusis. Guyot. Inst. Feod. c. 5, § 12. Burrill.

ACCELERATOR. See CURE.

ACCEPT. To receive with approval or satisfaction; to receive with intent to retain. Abbott. See ACCEPTANCE.

ACCEPTANCE. See ACCEPT (Supp.).

ACCEPTANCE AU BESOIN (Fr.). In French Law. Acceptance in case of need; acceptance by one on whom a bill is drawn au besoin, that is, in case of refusal or failure of the drawee to accept. Story on Bills, §§ 65, 254, 255. Burrill.

ACCEPTANCE SUPRA PROTEST. In Mercantile Law. Acceptance over protest. An acceptance of a bill by a third person after protest for non-acceptance by the drawee; such acceptance being for the honor of the drawer, or some particular endorser. 3 Kent's Com. 87; Story on Bills, § 121. ACCOLA (Lat. from ad, by, and colere, to dwell).

In Civil Law. One who inhabits or occupies land near a place, as one who dwells by a river or on the bank of a river. Dig. 43, 13, 3, 6.

In Feudal Law. A husbandman, an agricultural tenant; a tenant of a manor. Spelman. A name given to a class of villeins in Italy. Barrington. Obs. Stat. 302. Burrill.

ACCOMMODARE (Lat. from ad, to, and commodum, benefit). In the Civil Law. To accommodate; to allow against strict rule (contra summi juris regulam); to grant or transfer as a matter of favor rather than right. Calv. Lex. Burrill.

ACCOMMODATION. An arrangement or engagement made as a favor to another, not upon a consideration received; something done to oblige, usually spoken of a loan of money or commercial paper; also, a friendly agreement or composition of differences. Rice vs. McLaren, 42 Me. 157. Abbott.

ACCOMMODATION BILL or NOTE. Accommodation paper is a bill of exchange which one person accepts, or a note which he makes and delivers to another without pecuniary consideration as between parties, but to oblige or favor the latter by enabling him to obtain a discount or an increased credit. Such paper, notwithstanding the want of a consideration moving to acceptor or maker, is enforced against him, in favor of a purchaser for value and before maturity. Lenheim vs. Wilmore, 55 Pa. St. 73. Abbott. Defined 71 Me. 273. See Story on Bills. See ACCOMMODATION PAPER; BILL OF EXCHANGE; PROMISSORY NOTE.

ACCOMMODATION INDORSEMENT. See INDORSEMENT.

ACCOMMODATION LAND. In English Law. Land acquired for the purpose of being added to other land for its improvement; an accommodation road is one constructed to give access to a particular piece of land. Rapalje & Lawrence. See GROUND RENT.

ACCOMMODATION PAPER. See ACCOMMODATION BILL (Supp.).

ACCOMMODATION WORKS. When a railway company takes lands compulsorily it is bound to construct all gates, bridges, fences, etc., necessary to make good any interruptions to the use of the lands through which the railway passes (see Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, s. 68). Byrnes. Hodge Railw. 361.

ACCOUNT, RENDER. An action at law in fiduciary matters, wherein a jury settles disputed items. 3 Bl. Com. 164, 437. See 1 Story, Eq. §§ 442, 59; Portsmouth vs.

Donaldson, 32 Pa. 204 (1858); Strong, J.; Dubourgh vs. United States, 7 Pet. 625 (1833). Anderson.

ACCOUNTABLE. Liable to demand for the exhibition of an account; under obligation to disclose fully the circumstances of a transaction involving the investment or expenditure of trust funds. Anderson.

Accountable (1 am, in promissory note), 2 Ld. Raym. 1396; (1 am, in letter) 5 Binn (Pa.) 195; (1 am, in sealed writing) 1 Lev. 47; (in bill or note) 1 Bouv. Inst. 458; (in a statute) 9 R. I. 539.

What executors are accountable for, see 1 T. R. 42; 4 Ves. 596; Will. Trust. 146; 2 Mad. ch. 141, 142. See ADMINISTRATOR; EXECUTOR; TRUSTEE.

ACCOUNTABLE RECEIPT. A written acknowledgment of the receipt, by the maker of it, of money or other personal property, coupled with a promise or obligation to account for or pay to some person the whole or some part thereof. State vs. Riebe, 27 Minn. 317 (1880); Gilfillan, C. J., Gen. St. Minn. 1878, c. 96, § 1; and see Commonwealth vs. Lawless, 101 Mass. 32 (1869). Anderson.

ACQUETS. See ACQUITS.

ACQUIESCE. To consent by silence, or without an express acknowledgment or declaration. See Allen vs. McKee, 1 Sumn. 276. Abbott. See ACQUIESCENCE.

ACQUIESCENCE. See ACQUIESCE (Supp.).

ACQUIRED. "In the law of descent, includes lands that come to a person in any other way than by gift, devise, or descent, from an ancestor." Re Millars' Wills, 2 Lea 61 (1878); Donohue's Estate, 36 Cal. 332 (1868). Anderson.

ACQUIT A CAUTION. In French Law. A certificate stating that security had been given that freight loaded on a ship would not be exported. English.

ACRE-FIGHT. A duel by single combatants, with sword and lance. English.

ACROSS. May mean over, in either direction. It does not exclude the idea of passing over in the longest direction. A reservation in a deed of a right of way across the land is not necessarily to be confined to a right to cross the lot by its narrowest dimensions, but should be construed to give a right to cross at such points as will effectuate the actual intent of the parties. Brown vs. Meady, 10 Me. 391. Abbott. See also 1 Barn. & Ad. 448; 5 Pick (Mass.) 163. R. & L.

ACT OF ATTAINDER. A legislative act attainting a person. Abbott. See ATTAINDER.

ACT OF CONGRESS; OF THE LEGISLATURE; OF PARLIAMENT. Usually employed as meaning a law passed by either legislative body. Words "act of the congress" are as strong and unequivocal as "statute of the congress." U. S. vs. Smith, 2 Mass. 143, 151. Abbott. See STATUTE.

ACT OF LAW. The operation of legal rules upon given facts or occurrences; as when it is said that a son succeeds to his father's estate by the act (or, more appropriately, operation) of law. Abbott. 17 Wall. 373, 376. An act of law exonerates from liability. 1 Bl. Com. 123; 15 Wend. 400; 2 Barb. 180; 2 Whart. Ev. §§ 858-62.

ACTA EXTERIORA INDICANT INTERIORA SECRETA. Outward acts indicate inward purposes. Where intent and act must concur to constitute the crime, the intention can only be inferred from the acts of the accused, considered with other circumstances. Broom's Max. 301. Abbott. See INTENTION.

ACTE. In French Law. Denotes a document, or formal, solemn writing, embodying a legal attestation that something has been done corresponding to one sense or use of the English word act; such documents as birth, marriage, death. Brown; Abbott.

ACTIO PRAE JUDICIALIS. In Civil Law. Preliminary or preparatory. Brought for the determination of some point or question arising in another or principal action, and so called from its being determined before (prius, or prae judiciari) the principal action. Bract. 104a. Cowell. Inst. 4, 6, 13; Heinecc. Elem. lib. 4, tit. 6, § 1142; Halifax Anal. b. 3, c. 1, n. 14. Burrill.

ACTIO PRO SOCIO. Civil Law. An action for a co-partner; an action which one co-partner (socius) might have against another. Dig. 17, 2; Cod. 4, 37. Burrill.

ACTIO RERUM AMOTARUM. Civil Law. Action for things removed; which, in case of divorce, lay for a husband against a wife, to recover things carried away by the latter, in contemplation of such divorce. Dig. 25, 2; id. 25, 2, 25, 30. Burrill.

ACTIO TUTELAE. Included various actions founded on the claims or obligations arising on the relation analogous to that of guardian and ward. Abbott. See GUARDIAN; WARD.

ACTION OF ABSTRACTED MULTURES. See ASTRICTION TO A MILL (Supp.).

ACTION OF SIMPLE REDUCTION. In Scotch Law. An action to have a writing called for declared null, until produced. English. See RESCISSORY ACTIONS.

ACTION OF TRESPASS. An action for damages for injuries resulting immediately from an act of force. If not the immediate result of the forcible act, the proper form of action is case. English. See ACTION ON THE CASE; TRESPASS.

ACTION PREPARATORY. Brought to determine a preliminary matter on which another matter depends, or to determine some question involved in another action. English.

ACTIVE. Requiring intelligent direction, personal exertion; opposed to passive. Anderson. See CURE (Supp.); TRUST.

ACTIVE DEBT. One drawing interest. English.

ACTORNAY. In Scotch Law. An attorney. English.

ACTS. See LEGISLATIVE ACTS OF THE STATE.

ACTS, BREAD. English statutes provided for the sustenance of those in prison for debt. English.

ACTS OF SEDERUNT. Ordinances of the court of session, in Scotland, enacted under the act of 1540, ch. 93, which authorized making such statutes as might be found necessary for ordering process and expediting justice. Bell; Abbott.

ACTUAL DETERMINATION. A right of appeal is, by some statutes, given only from the actual determination of the court. 3 Daly (N. Y.) 422; 42 How. (N. Y.), Pr. 255; 46 N. Y. 358; 47 N. Y. 67, 244. Rapalje & Lawrence.

ACTUAL NOTICE. A notice really given in distinction from one inferred or imputed by the law on account of the existence of means of knowledge. 14 Ga. 145; 35 Me. 556. R. & L.

ACTUAL PAYMENT. In statutes permitting the creation of limited partnerships, there is usually a provision that at the formation of the partnership proof must be made of the actual payment of the capital. Barb. (N. Y.) 283; 34 Pa. St. 344. R. & L.

ACTUAL TOTAL LOSS. Phrase used in marine insurance to denote such loss of property insured as derives the party insured of the original thing in distinction from any injury to the property which although not amounting to such a loss, gives the insured the right to recover the insurance money. 25 Ohio St. 64. R. & L. See INSURANCE.

ACTUAL VIOLENCE. See ASSAULT.

ACTUS CURIAE NEMINEM GRAVABIT. An act of the court shall prejudice no one. Cumber vs. Wane, 1 Str. 425; Moor vs. Roberts, 3 C. B. N. S. 844; Miles vs. Bough, 3 Dowl. & L. 105. Abbott.

ACTUS DEI NEMINI FACIT INJURIAM. An act of God does injury to no one. Broom, Max. 230. Abbott. See also 2 Bl. Com. 122; 5 Co. 87. See ACT OF GOD.

ACTUS LEGIS NEMINI FACIT INJURIAM. An act of the law does injury to no one. Limited in its operation so that it shall not work prejudice to the rights of any person. Milbourn vs. Ewart, 5 term, 381; Cage vs. Acton, 1 Ld. Raym. 515; 2 Bl. Com. 123. Abbott.

ACTUS LEGITIMI NON RECIPIUNT MODUM. Acts requiring to be done by law do not admit of qualification. Hob. 153; Branch's Princ. Burrill.

ACTUS ME INVITO FACTUS, NON EST MEUS FACTUS. An act done without my assent is not my act. Trayn, Max. 21. Abbott. See also Branch's Princ.; Bract, fol. 101b.

ACTUS NON FACIT REUM, NISI MENS SIT REA. An act does not make one guilty, unless the intention be guilty. To constitute a crime, the intent and act must both concur. Rex vs. Higgins, 2 East. 21; Rex vs. Scofield, cited 2 East. P. C. 1028; Dugdale vs. Regina, 1 Ellis & B. 435. Abbott. See also Broom, Max. 144 (226).

AD ADMITTENDUM CLERICUM. For admitting a clerk. The name of a writ which lay at common law in favor of one who had by the common law proceeding (as by action of quare impedit) established his right of presentation to a benefice. Writ practically obsolete. Abbott. See also 3 Bl. Com. 250; 3 Steph. Com. 655. Burrill.

AD CAPTUM VULGI. Adapted to the common understanding. Rapalje & Lawrence.

AD COLLIGENDUM BONA DEFUNCTI. To collect the goods of the deceased. Special letters of administration granted to a "collector" where probate of will, or appointment of regular representative, is delayed. R. & L. See ADMINISTRATION.

AFFECTED WITH A PUBLIC INTEREST. The phrase is not capable of exact definition. Nevertheless, it is the standard by which the validity of price-fixing legislation, in respect of a business, must be tested. 277 U. S. 355.

In 273 U. S. 430, it was said that the interest meant was not "such as arises from the mere fact that the public derives benefit, accommodation, ease, or enjoyment from the existence or operation of the business; and while the word has not always been limited narrowly as strictly denoting 'a right,' that synonym more nearly than any other expresses the sense in which it is to be understood." The business must be such (p. 434) "as to justify the conclusion that it has been devoted to a public use and its use thereby, in effect, granted to the public." And again (p. 438) after reviewing former decisions, it was said that "each of the decisions of this court upholding governmental price regulation, aside from cases involving legislation to tide over temporary emergencies, has turned upon the existence of conditions, peculiar to the business under consideration, which bore such a substantial and definite relation to the public interest as to justify an indulgence of the legal fiction of a grant by the owner to the public of an interest in the use." Id., 355, 356. See PUBLIC INTEREST.

ALIEN. Within the Meaning of Section 1 (a) of the Anti-Alien Land Law of the State of Washington. "Alien" does not include an alien who has in good faith declared his intention to become a citizen of the United States, but does include all other aliens and all corporations and other organized groups of persons a majority of whose capital stock is owned or controlled by aliens or a majority of whose members are aliens. 263 U. S. 213.

ALIEN SEAMEN. Within the Meaning of the Alien Immigration Act of December 26, 1920. The term "alien seamen" is not to be construed as meaning seamen on foreign vessels. In the act the term means "seamen who are aliens." It describes, aptly and exactly, seamen of alien nationality, dealing with them as individuals, with reference to their personal citizenship; and it has no other significance either in common usage or in law. The act does not qualify this term by any reference to the nationality of the vessels; nor does it use the words "seamen on foreign vessels" or any equivalent phrase which would have been appropriate had it been intended to describe the seamen on such vessels. 269 U. S. 310.

The words "alien seamen" are used in this act in the same sense as in the act of 1917 with which it is in pari materia, that is, as meaning aliens employed as seamen on any vessel arriving in the United States. Id. 312. See ALIENS EMPLOYED ON ANY VESSEL ARRIVING IN THE UNITED STATES FROM A FOREIGN PORT (Supp.).

ALIENABLE. That which can be transferred from one person to another. English. See ALIENATION.

ALIENATIO MENTIS. Loss of consciousness; deprivation of reason. English.

ALIENISM. The state, condition, or character of an alien. 2 Kent's Com. 56, 64, 59. Burrill. See ALIEN.

ALIENS EMPLOYED ON ANY VESSEL ARRIVING IN THE UNITED STATES FROM A FOREIGN PORT. Within the Meaning of the Alien Immigration Act of 1917. The act of 1917 dealt specifically with "alien seamen," using that term, as shown by its general definitions and various provisions, as meaning "aliens employed on any vessel arriving in the United States from a foreign port." 269 U. S. 311. See ALIEN SEAMEN (Supp.).

ALIENUS (Lat. from alius, another). In Civil and Old English Law. "Another"; belonging to another. 1 Bl. Com. 306. Burrill.

ALIIQUID POSSESSIONIS ET (or SED) NIHIL JURIS (L. Lat.). Somewhat of possession, and nothing of right. Bract. fol. 39a, 160a. Burrill.

ALL. Excludes the idea of limitation. 226 U. S. 383.

ALLEGE. To affirm; to declare; to plead. English. See ALLEGATION.

ALLOGRAPH. A document written by another than any of the parties thereto. (The opposite of autograph.) English.

ALLOTMENT. See TRUST ALLOTMENT (Supp.).

ALLOTTEE. The person to whom something is allotted. English. See ALLOW.

ALLOW. See ERRONEOUSLY ALLOWED (Supp.).

ALLOWANCE. See DATE OF ALLOWANCE (Supp.).

ALLOYNOUR. One who conceals, steals, or carries off a thing privately. Britt. c. 17. Burrill.

ALLY OF ENEMY. Within the Meaning of the Trading with the Enemy Act. (a) Any individual, partnership, or other body of individuals, of any nationality, resident within the territory (including that occupied by the military and naval forces) of any nation which is an ally of a nation with which the United States is at war, or resident outside the United States and doing business within such territory, and any corporation incorporated within such territory of such ally nation, or incorporated within any country other than the United States and doing business within such territory. (b) The government of any nation which is an ally of a nation with which the United States is at war, or any political or municipal subdivision of such ally nation, or any officer, official, agent, or agency thereof. (c) Such other individuals, or body or class of individuals, as may be natives, citizens, or subjects of any nation which is an ally of a nation with which the United States is at war, other than citizens of the United States, wherever resident or wherever doing business, as the president, if he shall find the safety of the United States or the successful prosecution of the war shall so require, may, by proclamation, include within the term "ally of enemy." 266 U. S. 464. See ENEMY.

ALM. Soul. English.

ALMA MATER. Benign mother; a foster mother. Term applied to college or university where one graduated. (Said first applied to Cambridge.) English.

AMERICAN CLAUSE. A clause in a policy of insurance that the insurer shall be liable for the full amount mentioned in the policy despite any subsequent insurance of the same subject by others. English. 14 Wend. (N. Y.) 399, 475.

AMERICAN PLAN. In Industrial Relations. A plan, the basic requirement of which is that there shall be no discrimination for or against an employee on account of his affiliation or non-affiliation with a labor union, except that at least one non-union man in each craft should be employed on each particular job as an evidence of good faith. In effect, the "American plan" and the "open shop" policy are the same. 268 U. S. 75. See CLOSED SHOP (Supp.).

AMIRAL. See ADMIRAL.

AMONG THE SEVERAL STATES. Within the Meaning of the Constitution, Art. I, Section 8, Clauses 3 and 18, which confer upon congress the power "to regulate commerce . . . among the several states." The phrase "among the several states" marks the distinction, for the purpose of governmental regulation, between commerce which concerns two or more states and commerce which is confined to a single state and does not affect other states; the power to regulate the former being conferred upon congress and the regulation of the latter remaining with the states severally. 223 U. S. 46. See COMMERCE; REGULATE (Supp.).

AMOTIO. In the Civil Law. A moving or taking away. 1 Swinton's R. 205. Burrill. See AMOTION.

AMPLIUS (Lat.). In the Roman Law. More; further; more time. A word which the praetor pronounced in cases where there was any obscurity in a cause and the judices were uncertain whether to condemn or acquit; by which the case was referred to a day named. Ad. Rom. Ant. 287. Burrill.

ANGUISH. See MENTAL SUFFERING.

ANGYLDE. The price fixed by the Saxons as the value of a man. The value placed upon cattle and chattels. English.

ANIMAL GLUE. A glue made from animal substances, which has long been in common use as an adhesive and is especially adapted to use in wood veneering, in which thin sheets or layers of wood are fastened together by the use of an adhesive bonding material. The characteristic qualities of animal glue, making it peculiarly suitable for that use, are a low absorptiveness of water and a consequent high degree of fluidity, facilitating its application by mechanical means, high elasticity and great tensile strength. A high water content, characteristic of other adhesive preparations, delays drying, warps the wood and when dry leaves too little bonding material to secure the requisite strength. In practice, animal glue is made suitably fluid for use in wood veneering by the addition of a critically small amount of water, three parts by weight to one of glue. 277 U. S. 247. See DEGENERATION (Supp.).

ANKER. An obsolete measure of capacity which contained ten of the old wine gallons, equivalent to eight and one-third imperial gallons. Byrne.

BOLTAGIUM, BOLDAGIUM or BOL-HAGIUM. A little house or cottage. English.

BOLTING. In English Practice. A term formerly used in the English Inns of court, more particularly at Gray's Inn, signifying private arguing of cases, as distinguished from mooting, which was a more formal and public mode of argument. Burrill.

BOMBAY REGULATIONS. Passed for the presidency of Bombay and territories subordinate thereto. Passed by governors in council of Bombay until 1834, when power of local legislation ceased and the acts relating thereto were henceforth passed by the governor-general of India in council. Abbott.

BON (Fr.). In Old French Law. A royal order or check on the treasury invented by Francis I. Steph. Lect. 387.

In Modern Law. The name of a clause (bon pour — good for so much), added to a cedula or promise, where it was not in the handwriting of the signer, containing the amount of the sum which he obliged himself to pay. Poth. Oblig. part 4, ch. 1, art. 2, § 1. Burrill.

BOND. Bonds are in their essence only evidences of debt. They are choses in action. Whatever incidental qualities may be added by usage of business or by statutory provision, this characteristic remains and shows itself by the fact that their destruction physically will not destroy the debt which they represent. They are representative and not the thing itself. 277 U. S. 14, 15. Need not be under seal today in most states. See BOND.

BONDSMAN. One who is bound in an obligation for performance of some act by another person; a surety. Abbott. See SURETYSHIP.

BOYCOTT, PRIMARY. A boycott used against the industrial antagonist directly. 257 U. S. 364. See BOYCOTT; BOYCOTT, SECONDARY (Supp.).

BOYCOTT, SECONDARY. Where many combine to injure one in his business by coercing third persons against their will to cease patronizing him by threats of similar injury. In such a case the many have a legal right to withdraw their trade from the one, they have the legal right to withdraw their trade from third persons, and they have the right to advise third persons of their intention to do so when each act is considered singly. The question in such cases is whether the moral coercion exercised over a stranger to the original controversy by steps in themselves legal becomes a legal wrong. 257 U. S. 330. See 254 U. S. 466.

A boycott used against an outsider because of his influence on or connection with the industrial antagonist. 257 U. S. 364, footnote. See BOYCOTT; BOYCOTT, PRIMARY.

CALE. In French Law. A punishment for sailors. It consisted of hauling them under a ship. English.

CALENDS. Among the Romans, was the first day of every month, being spoken of by itself, or the very day of the new moon, which usually happen together; and if pridie, the day before, be added to it, then it is the last day of the foregoing month. If any number be placed with it, it signifies that day in the former month which comes so much before the month named; as the tenth calends of October is the twentieth day of September; for if one reckons backwards, beginning at October, the twentieth day of September makes the tenth day of September. In March, May, July, and October, the calends begin at the sixteenth day, but in other months at the fourteenth; which calends must bear the name of the month following, and be numbered backwards from the first day of said following months. Hopton Con. 69. Abbott.

CALENDS, GREEK. Words meaning time never to come, as the Greeks had no calends. English.

CALL RULE. In 1906, the Chicago Board of Trade adopted what is known as the "call" rule. By it members were prohibited from purchasing or offering to purchase, during the period between the close of the Call and the opening of the session on the next business day, any wheat, corn, oats, or rye "to arrive" at a price other than the closing bid at the Call. The Call was over, with rare exceptions, by two o'clock. The change effected was this: Before the adoption of the rule, members fixed their bids throughout the day at such prices as they respectively saw fit; after the adoption of the rule, the bids had to be fixed at the day's closing bid on the Call until the opening of the next session.

The Nature of the Rule. The restriction was upon the period of price-making. It required members to desist from further price-making after the close of the Call until 9:30 A.M. the next business day; but there was no restriction upon the sending out of bids after close of the Call. Thus it required members who desired to buy grain "to arrive" to make up their minds before the close of the Call how much they were willing to pay during the interval before the next session of the Board. The rule made it to their interest to attend the Call; and if they did not fill their wants by purchases there, to make the final bid high enough to enable them to purchase from country dealers.

The Scope of the Rule. It is restricted in operation to grain "to arrive." It applies only to a small part of the grain shipped from day to day to Chicago, and to an even smaller part of the day's sales. Members were left free to purchase grain already in Chicago from anyone at any price throughout the day. It applies only during a small part of the business day; members were left free to purchase during the sessions of the Board grain "to arrive," at any price, from members anywhere and from non-members anywhere except on the premises of the Board. It applied only to grain shipped to Chicago; members were left free to purchase at any price throughout the day from either members or non-members, grain "to arrive" at any other market. Country dealers and farmers had available in practically every part of the territory called tributary to Chicago some other market for grain "to arrive." Thus Missouri, Kansas, Nebraska, and parts of Illinois are also tributary to St. Louis; Nebraska and Iowa, to Omaha; Minnesota, Iowa, South and North Dakota, to Minneapolis or Duluth; Wisconsin and parts of Iowa and of Illinois, to Cincinnati; Indiana and parts of Illinois, to Louisville.

The Effects of the Rule. As it applies to only a small part of the grain shipped to Chicago and to that only during a part of the business day and does not apply at all to grain shipped to other markets, the rule had no appreciable effect on general market prices; nor did it materially affect the total volume of grain coming to Chicago. But within the narrow limits of its operation the rule helped to improve market conditions thus:

(a) It created a public market for grain "to arrive." Before its adoption, bids were made privately. Men had to buy and sell without adequate knowledge of actual market conditions. This was disadvantageous to all concerned, but particularly so to country dealers and farmers.

(b) It brought into the regular market hours of the Board sessions more of the trading in grain "to arrive."

(c) It brought buyers and sellers into more direct relations; because on the Call they gathered together for a free and open interchange of bids and offers.

(d) It distributed the business in grain "to arrive" among a far larger number of Chicago receivers and commission merchants than had been the case there before.

(e) It increased the number of country dealers engaging in this branch of the business; supplied them more regularly with bids from Chicago; and also increased the number of bids received by them from competing markets.

(f) It eliminated risks necessarily incident to a private market, and thus enabled country dealers to do business on a smaller margin. In that way the rule made it possible for them to pay more to farmers without raising the price to consumers.

(g) It enabled country dealers to sell some grain "to arrive" which they would otherwise have been obliged either to ship to Chicago commission merchants or to sell for "future delivery."

(h) It enabled those grain merchants of Chicago who sell to millers and exporters to trade on a smaller margin, and by paying more for grain or selling it for less, to make the Chicago market more attractive for both shippers and buyers of grain.

(i) Incidentally it facilitated trading "to arrive" by enabling those engaged in these transactions to fulfil their contracts by tendering grain arriving at Chicago on any railroad, whereas formerly shipments had to be made over the particular railroad designated by the buyer. 246 U. S. 237-241.

CANFARA. A trial of hot iron formerly used in England. R. & L.

CANONICAL. Relating to or conforming with the canon law (q. v.). English.

CANONICUS. In the Civil Law. Of or relating to an annual tribute.

In Ecclesiastical Law. A spiritual person found in a list; a canon; a prebendary. English.

CANONIST. A professor of canon law. English.

CANTEL. In Old English Law. That which is added above measure, heaped measure. Burrill.

CANUM. A tribute, usually something produced from the soil, due the lord from a feudal tenant. English.

CAP OF MAINTENANCE. One of the regalia or ornaments of state belonging to the sovereigns of England, before whom it is carried at coronations and other great solemnities. Also carried before mayors of several cities of England. R. & L.

CAPAX NEGOTII. Capable of negotiating. English.

CAPELLA (L. Lat.). In Old Records. A box, cabinet, or repository in which were preserved the relics of martyrs; a small building in which relics were preserved; an oratory or chapel.

In Old English Law. A chapel. Fleta, lib. 5, c. 12, § 1. Burrill.

CAPAS AD RESPONDENDUM. See AD RESPONDENDUM (Supp.).

CAPIATUR PRO FINE. Let him be taken for the fine. A clause in a judgment in debt, directing that the party be taken until he paid the fine, being a punishment for the public misdemeanor as well as the private injury. English.

CAPITAL. See INVESTED CAPITAL; MONEYED CAPITAL (Supp.).

CAPITAL STOCK. In Taxing Statutes. The term has no fixed meaning in taxing statutes, and must be interpreted in each case by reference to the context, the nature, purpose, and history of the statute, and by other aids to construction. 268 U. S. 376, 377.

Within the Meaning of the Revenue Act of 1918, providing that the tax upon an association is based upon the average value of its "capital stock," including surplus and undivided profits. The words "capital stock" should be interpreted in their entirety, and, in the absence of a fixed share capital, as equivalent to the capital invested in the business, that is, the net value of the property owned by the association and used in its business. 265 U. S. 163. See ASSOCIATION; CORPORATION (Supp.).

The capital stock of a corporation, its net assets, and its shares of stock are entirely different things. The value of one bears no fixed nor necessary relation to the value of the other. 268 U. S. 377; 263 U. S. 111; 216 U. S. 425; 117 U. S. 136, 137; 95 U. S. 686.

CAPITALE VIVENS. Live cattle. English.

CAPITALIS. The head, chief, or principal, as applied to persons, judicial proceedings, property, etc. English. Also affecting or involving life. See CAPITAL PUNISHMENT.

CAPITARE (L. Lat.). In Old Law and Surveys. To head, front, or abut; to touch at the head or end. MS. Dat. A.D. 1317. Burrill.

CAPITATIM. By the head; to each individual. English.

CAPITE MINUTUS. In Civil Law. One who has lost legal status. English.

CAPITITUM. A covering for the head mentioned in Stat. 1, Hen. IV. and other old statutes, which prescribe what dresses shall be worn by all degrees of persons. R. & L.

CAPITULI AGRI. Lands that lie at the head or upper end of the land or furrows. English.

CAPPA. A cap. One of the ceremonies of creating an earl or marquis. English.

CAPTATOR. One who attains anything through unfair methods. English.

CAPTIO. A taking or seizure of a thing; the taking or arrest of a person; a holding of a court; a taking or receiving. English.

CAPUTUM. A head of land; a headland. English.

CAR. See ONE MAN CAR (Supp.).

CAR SERVICE. Within the Meaning of Section 402 of the Transportation Act. The term "car service" includes use, control, distribution, and exchange of locomotives, cars, and other vehicles used in interstate transportation. 264 U. S. 342; 263 U. S. 533. See RAILROAD (Supp.). This section also provides for just regulation of car service by the Interstate Commerce Commission, and gives that body power, in case of shortage of equipment or other emergency, to suspend the regulations, to give just directions, without regard to ownership, to promote the service and to adjust proper compensation for its use, and "to require such joint or common use of terminals, including main-line track or tracks for a reasonable distance outside of such terminals," as in the opinion of the Commission will meet the emergency and the public interest, and upon hearing determine just compensation for use of same. Id., 342, 343.

CARABUS. A raft or boat. English.

CARCANNUM (L. Lat.). In Old English Law. A prison or workhouse. LL. Canuti, c. 62. Burrill.

CARCARE (L. Lat.). In Old English. To load; to load a vessel. Towns. Pl. 59. Burrill.

CARCEL-AGE. Prison fees. English.

CARECTARIUS, CARETORIUS. A carter. English.

CARELESSNESS OR NEGLIGENCE. Within the Meaning of the Cummins Amendment of the Interstate Commerce Act of February 4, 1887, concerning the duty of carriers to issue receipts or bills of lading for interstate freight, and their liability for loss or damage, providing, "that if the loss, damage, or injury complained of was due to delay or damage while being loaded or unloaded, or damaged in transit by carelessness or negligence, then no notice of claim nor filing of claim shall be required as a condition precedent to recovery." The use of the words "carelessness or negligence" was intended to relieve the shipper from the necessity of making written proof of claim when, and only when, the damage was due to the carrier's actual negligent conduct, and by "carelessness or negligence" is meant not a rule of liability without fault, but negligence in fact. 270 U. S. 422. See PRESUMED NEGLIGENCE (Supp.). The words "carelessness or negligence" qualify the whole clause; "damaged" should be read "damage" and the comma after "unloaded" should be omitted. 268 U. S. 87.

CARENA. A term used in old Ecclesiastical law to denote a period of forty days. R. & L.

CARGA. In Spanish Law. An incumbrance; a charge. White's New Recop. b. 2, tit. 13, ch. 2, § 2. Burrill.

CARGARE (L. Lat.). In Old English. To charge. Burrill.

CARGO BEAM. A beam employed in combination with other elements to carry the weight of cargo to be removed from the holds of vessels alongside a pier or wharf and deposited on the pier or in the warehouses fronting on the same. 275 U. S. 338.

CARIAGIUM (L. Lat.). In Old English Law. Carriage; the carrying of goods or other things for the king. Burrill.

CARISTIA. Dearth, scarcity. English.

CARK. A quantity of wool, whereof thirty make a sarpler. Sarpler is 2,240 pounds weight. Stat. 27 Hen. VI. c. 2. R. & L.

CARMEN (Lat.). In the Roman Law. Literally, a verse or song. A formula, or form of words used on various occasions as of divorce. Taylor's Civ. Law. 349. Burrill.

CARNALITER (L. Lat.). In Old Criminal Law. Carnally. Carnaliter cognovi, carnally knew. Technical words in indictments for rape, and held essential. 1 Hale's P. C. 637-639; 3 Inst. 60. Burrill. See CARNALLY KNEW.

CARNO. Immunity or privilege. English.

CAROOME. A London, England, license to keep a cart. English.

CARPEMEALS. Cloth made in the northern parts of England, of a coarse kind, mentioned in 7 Jac. c. 16. R. & L.

CARRACLE, CARRICLE. A large ship. English.

CARRERA. In Spanish Law. A carriage-way; the right of a carriage-way. Las Partidas, Part 3, tit. 31, l. 3. Burrill.

CARRIER. Within the Meaning of the Transportation Act of 1920. The natural meaning of the term is one who operates a railroad. 265 U. S. 432. The term does not include one whose shipments are carried by railroad, for example an express company. See EXPRESS COMPANY; TRANSPORTATION COMPANY (Supp.). See also 265 U. S. 293; 254 U. S. 187.

Within the Meaning of a Provision of the Federal Control Act of 1918, declaring "carriers while under federal control" liable and suable. Here the term "carriers" is used as it is understood in common speech, meaning the transportation systems as distinguished from the corporations owning or operating them. 271 U. S. 226, quoting 256 U. S. 559. This means, as matter of law, that the government or its agency for operation could be sued, for under the existing law the legal person in control of the carrier was responsible for its acts. Id.; 256 U. S. 561.

Within the Meaning of the Employers' Liability Act of 1908. A "common carrier by railroad" is one who operates a railroad as a means of carrying for the public—that is to say, a railroad company acting as a common carrier. 265 U. S. 295; 254 U. S. 187-188.

CARRIER BY RAILROAD. See CARRIER (Supp.).

CARRY. To bear on one's person. Carry Away. See CARRYING AWAY.

Carry Concealed Weapons. See ARMS.

Carry Costs. To have the right to costs annexed to it, as a judgment.

Carry On. To transact, as a business. Single act pertaining to a particular business will not constitute the "engaging in or carrying on" the business. Well vs. State, 52 Ala. 19; U. S. vs. Jackson, 1 Hugh, 331.

Carry Stock. To hold stock or merchandise for another. 100 Mass. 421.

CARTA DE FORESTA (L. Lat.). In Old English Law. The Charter of the Forest, called Charia de Foresta. Burrill.

CARUCAGIUM. A tax or tribute anciently imposed on every plow, for the public service. English.

CAS FORTUIT. See CASUS FORTITUS.

CASATA (L. Lat.). In Old European Law. A house with land sufficient for the support of one family. Otherwise called hida, a hide of land, and by Bede, familia. Burrill.

CASATUS. A vassal or feudal tenant possessing a casata (q. v.), that is, having a house, household, and property of his own. Burrill.

CASE. Within the Meaning of the Constitution, Art. III, Section 2. Whenever the law provides a remedy enforceable in the federal courts according to the regular course of legal procedure, and that remedy is pursued, there arises a "case," whether the subject of the litigation be property or status. 270 U. S. 576.

Within the Meaning of Jud. Code Section 128. A petition for naturalization is a "case," and an order of the District Court denying the petition is reviewable by the Circuit Court of Appeals. Id., 577, 578.

CASHLITE. A mulct or fine. English.

CASINGHEAD GASOLINE. A product attained by compression of gases which come from oil wells. Like the lighter ends or elements first coming off in the distillation of crude oil (see NAPHTHA), casinghead gasoline is highly volatile and dangerous to handle. Its gravity is about 88 to 90 degrees and its vapor tension is from 30 to 30 pounds to the square inch. 268 U. S. 547. See WEATHERING (Supp.).

CASSETUR BILLA. See CASSETUR BREVE.

CASSOCK. A garment worn by priests. English.

CASTFL, CASTLE. A fortress in a town; a citadel; a stronghold; the mansion of a nobleman. (More than eleven hundred castles were demolished in England during the civil war.) English.

CASTING. Casting an essoin was alleging an excuse for not appearing in court to answer an action. Holthouse; Abbott. See ESSOIN.

CASTRENSIS (Lat.). In Roman Law. Relating to the camp or military service. Castrense peculium. A portion of property which a son acquired in war, or from his connection with the camp. Dig. 49, 17. Burrill.

CASUAL. That which happens accidentally; or is brought about by causes unknown or as to which nothing is suggested.

Casual Ejector. The nominal defendant in the common-law action of ejectment; so called because, by the fiction underlying that action, he was represented as having, by accident or without any legal cause necessary to be considered, entered on the premises and ejected the lawful occupant. Now abolished.

Casual Pauper. An expression common in England for a person who applies for relief under the poor-laws in a parish where he has not a lawful settlement—where he is by accident, as it were. Ward in workhouse, hospital is called casual ward.

Casualties of Superiority in the feudal language of the Scotch law are payments from an inferior to a superior, that is, from a tenant to his lord, which arise upon uncertain events, as opposed to the payments of rent at fixed and stated times. Abbott.

CASUAL EVIDENCE. A phrase used to denote (in contradistinction to "pre-appointed evidence") all such evidence as happens to be admissible of a fact or event but which was not prescribed by statute, or otherwise arranged beforehand to be the evidence of the fact or event. R. & L.

CATALLIS CAPTIS NOMINE DISTRICTIONIS. An obsolete writ that lay where a house was within a borough for rent issuing out of the same, and which warranted the taking of doors, windows, etc., by the way of distress. O. N. B. 66. R. & L.

CATALS. Goods and chattels. English.

CATASCOPUS. An archdeacon. English.

CATCHINGS. Things caught, and in the possession, custody, power, and dominion of the party, with a present capacity to use them for his own purposes. The term includes blubber, or pieces of whale flesh cut from the whale, and stowed on or under the deck of a ship. A policy of insurance upon outfits and catchings, substituted for the outfits, in a whaling voyage protects the blubber. Rogers vs. Mechanics Ins. Co., 1 Story C. Ct. 603; 4 Law Rep. 297. Abbott.

CATCHLAND. Land in Norfolk, so called because it is not known to what parish it belongs, and the minister who first seizes the tithes of it, by right of pre-occupation, enjoys them for that year. R. & L.

CATHEDRATICK. A sum of two shillings which was paid the bishop by the inferior clergy. English.

CATONIANA REGULA. In the Roman Law. The rule which is commonly expressed in the maxim, Quod ab initio non valet tractu temporis non convalescit, meaning that what is at the beginning void by reason of some technical (or other) legal defect will not become valid merely by length of time. The rule applied to the institution of haeredes, the bequest of legacies, and such like. Applied in English law; e. g., a married woman's will (being void when made) is not made valid merely because she lives to become a widow. R. & L.

CAUCASIAN. The word "Caucasian" is at best a conventional term, with an altogether fortuitous origin, which, under scientific manipulation, has come to include far more than the unscientific mind suspects. According to Keane, for example (The World's Peoples, 24, 28, 307, et seq.), it includes not only the Hindu, but some of the Polynesians (that is, the Maori, Tahitians, Samoans, Hawaiians, and others), the Hamites of Africa, upon the ground of the Caucasian cast of their features, though in color they range from brown to black. 261 U. S. 211.

The ill-chosen name of Caucasian, invented by Blumenbach in allusion to a South Caucasian skull of specially typical proportions, and applied by him to the so-called white races, is still current; it brings into one race peoples such as the Arabs and Swedes, although these are scarcely less different than the Americans and Malays, who are set down as two distinct races. Again, two of the best-marked varieties of mankind are the Australians and the Bushmen, neither of whom, however, seems to have a natural place in Blumenbach's series. Id., quoting 2 Encyclopaedia Britannica (11th ed.), p. 113. See ARYAN; RACE (Supp.).

CAUCUS. A private meeting of persons to formulate plans, or policies, or for other political purposes. English. Prohibited by general election laws of Pennsylvania. Leonard vs. Commonwealth, 112 Pa. 607, 626 (1886).

CAUDA TERRÆ. A land's end, or bottom of a ridge or furrow in arable lands. English.

CAULCEIS. Roads paved with flint or other stone. English.

CAUPONA (Lat.). In the Civil Law. An inn or tavern. Inst. 4, 5, 3; Dig. 4, 9, 1, 5. Burrill.

CAURSINES. Italian merchants who came to England in the reign of Henry III., where they established themselves as money-lenders, but were soon expelled for their usury and extortion. Seem to have been Lombards. Burrill.

CAUSAM NOBIS SIGNIFICES (L. Lat., you signify to us the reason). In Old English Practice. A writ which formerly lay where a mayor of a town or city, after having been commanded by the king's writ to give seisin to the king's grantee, had delayed to do so; commanding him to show cause why he delayed the performance of his duty. Burrill.

CAUSE LIST. An official list of actions, demurrers, petitions, appeals, etc., set down for trial or argument in open court; similar to the American "calendar," or "docket." R. & L. See DOCKET.

CAUSES CÉLÈBRES. Celebrated cases. Work containing report of the decisions of interest and importance in French courts in 17th & 18th centuries. Term is applied in the singular to any cause of great interest and importance. R. & L.

CAUSIDICUS. In Civil Law. A pleader; one who argued a cause ore tenus. Burrill.

CAUTELA. Caution; providence; care; heed. 6 Wheat. 108; 2 Saw. 150; 59 Pa. 333. Anderson.

CAUTIONE ADMITTENDA. A writ which lies against a bishop who holds an excommunicated person in prison for contempt notwithstanding he offers sufficient caution or security to obey the orders and commandments of the church for the future. Reg. Orig. 66. R. & L.

CAVEAT VENDITOR. Let the seller take heed. Exact opposite of maxim, caveat emptor (q. v.). In Civil Law. Seller was held responsible for the validity of the title to the property sold and for its quality or goodness in all cases, where a sound price was paid. Rules of caveat emptor not applicable in general are said to be governed by caveat venditor. Wright vs. Hart, 18 Wend. 449. Abbott.

CAVEAT VIATOR. Let the traveller beware. Used as a concise expression of the duty of a traveller on the highway to use due care to detect and avoid defects in the way. Cornwall vs. Metropolitan Commissioners of Sewers, 10 Exch. 771, 774. Abbott.

CAVEATEE. One who propounds an instrument, such as a will, for probate. 213 U. S. 259. See CAVEATOR (Supp.).

CAVEATOR. One who opposes the probate of an instrument, such as a will. 213 U. S. 259. See CAVEATEE (Supp.).

CAVERE (Lat.). In Civil and Common Law. To take care; to exercise caution. To provide for; to provide against; to forbid by law; to give security; to give caution or security on arrest. Burrill.

CAVERS. Offenders punished in the mote or miner's court. English.

CAYA. A quay, a kay or key, a wharf. English.

CEAP. A bargain, something for sale; cattle as a medium of exchange. Ceapgilde, payment or forfeiture of cattle.

CEDO. I grant. Word ordinarily used in Mexican conveyance to pass title to lands. Mulford vs. Le Franc, 26 Col. 88, 108. Abbott.

CELATION. Concealment of pregnancy or delivery. English.

CELDRA. A chaldron, a measure. English.

CELLARIUS. One who keeps provisions; a steward of a monastic institution; a cellarer or bursar. English.

CEMENT. A thoroughly standardized product, manufactured from limestone and shale, which are crushed to extreme fineness then subjected to high temperatures, which process produces a fused mass which when cooled is known as clinker. The clinker is then ground into the finished product which is then ready for transportation and use. Clinker is not subject to deterioration, but the ground clinker or cement deteriorates rapidly on exposure to moisture and cannot be kept in storage except for a limited period of time, 268 U. S. 591. See SPECIFIC JOB CONTRACT (Supp.).

CENDULÆ. Small pieces of wood laid like tiles to cover the roof of a house; shingles. English.

CENSARII. Farmers subject to a tax. English.

CENSITAIRE. In Canadian Law. A tenant by cens. See CENS.

CENSUALES. Those who paid a certain rent and performed certain services to obtain the protection of the church. English.

CENSUERE. They have decreed. In Roman Law. Applied to the decree of the Roman senate. English.

CENSUMETHIDUS or CENSUMOR-THIDUS. Dead rent, like that which is called mortmain. R. & L.

CENSURE. In Ecclesiastical Law. A spiritual punishment, consisting of withdrawing from a baptized person (lay or cleric) a privilege which the church gives him, or in wholly expelling him from the Christian Communion. Phillim. Ecc. L. 1367. See DEGRADATION, DEPRIVATION, EXCOMMUNICATION.

CENTAVO. In Spanish and South American countries, centavo is a small copper or nickel coin, in value six-tenths of a cent (actual), and one cent (nominal); one hundredth of a peso, which is worth thirty cents in American money. 200 U. S. 110, 111.

CENTENA. A hundred; a district of a hundred freemen, established for military and civil purposes; a Saxon hundred; a hundredweight. English. See HUNDRED.

CENTENARIUS. One of a centena or hundred; the head or chief of a centena. Among the Goths, Germans, Franks, and Lombards, an inferior judge. In Anglo-Saxon Law. A judicial magistrate; a centurio. English.

CENTIME (Fr.). One hundredth part of a franc. Stand. Dict.

CENTRAL OFFICE. Of the Supreme Court of Judicature in England established in pursuance of the recommendation of the legal departments commission (Second Rep. 23, 47), in order to consolidate the office of masters and associates of the common-law divisions, the crown office of the Queen's Bench division, the record and writ clerk's report, and enrollment offices of the chancery division, and a few others. Judicature (officers) Act, 1879, § 4, et seq. Divided into following departments, and business and staff distributed accordingly. (Rules of Court, Dec. 1879, Apr. 1880.)

1. Writ, appearance, and judgment;
  2. Summons and order (for the common divisions only);
  3. Filing and record (including the old chancery report office);
  4. Taxing (for the common-law divisions only);
  5. Enrollment;
  6. Judgments (for registry of judgments, etc.);
  7. Bills of sale;
  8. Married women's acknowledgments;
  9. Queen's remembrances;
  10. Crown office;
  11. Associates.
- See titles of various officials. R. & L.

CENTRALIZATION. System of government where the management of local matters is in the hands of functionaries appointed by the ministers of state, paid by the state, in constant communication, control, and inspiration of these ministers and where funds are largely applied to local purposes. R. & L.

CHACER. To chase; to hunt; also to compel. English.

CHACURUS. A horse or a hound for the chase. English.

CHAFFERY. Traffic; the practice of buying and selling. R. & L.

CHAIN. An engineer's measure of 22 yards length. R. & L.

CHAIN OF TITLE. A statement in regular order of the grantors and grantees of a particular piece of land, with the dates of the conveyances, and other facts briefly stated, relating to the title. English. See ABSTRACT OF A TITLE.

CHAIRMAN. One who presides over a meeting of any character. English.

CHAIRMAN OF COMMITTEES OF THE WHOLE HOUSE. In the English house of commons, this officer, always a member, is elected by the house on the assembling of every new parliament. When the house is in committee on bills introduced by the government, or in committee of ways and means, or supply, or in committee to consider preliminary resolutions, it is his duty to preside. Dod. Parl. Comp. R. & L.

CHALLENGE TO FIGHT. Offence punishable with fine and imprisonment, to challenge any person to fight a duel, or to endeavor to provoke him to send a challenge. Steph. Crim. Dig. 40; 6 Blackf. (Ind.) 20; 3 Wheel. Cr. Cas. 245; 1 Tyl. (Vt.) 181; South. (N. J.) 40. R. & L.

CHAMBER BUSINESS. See CHAMBERS. CHAMBER SURVEY. One not made on the land. English.

CHAMBER, WIDOW'S. Certain effects of a deceased person—such as a widow's apparel, the furniture of her bedchamber, etc., are set apart for her, and called in London, the "widow's chamber." 2 Bl. Com. 518. R. & L.

CHAMBERDEKINS or CHAMBER DEACONS. Certain poor Irish scholars, clothed in mean habit, and living under no rule; also beggars banished from England. 1 Hen. V. cc. 7, 8. R. & L.

In Old Scotch Law. A gift or a bribe taken by any great man or judge from any person, for delay of just actions, or furthering of wrongous actions, whether it be lands or any goods movable. Burrill.

CHANCE. What a man does not know and cannot find out is chance as to him, and is recognized as chance by the law. 264 U. S. 373.

CHANCEL. That part of a church which was originally set apart for the clergy to perform their religious offices; it answers to the choir in a cathedral or collegiate church. Phillim. Ecc. L. 1785, 1807. R. & L.

CHANGE. In sense of alteration, without signifying whether it is for better or worse. If for the better, amendment is the proper word. Abbott. See AMENDMENT.

As a place where merchants meet, at certain hours, for the transaction of business with each other. Abbott. See EXCHANGE.

Change of Grade. Not predicable of macadamizing a highway, even though the surface be elevated thereby. Warren vs. Henley, 31 Iowa 31.

Change of Title. Where an insurance policy provides that in case of any change of title, etc., in the property insured the insurance shall become void, there must be more than a merely nominal change to avoid the insurance. Ayres vs. Hartford, etc., Ins. Co., 17 Iowa 176. Thus an assignment of insured property as collateral security is not a sale, transfer, or change of title, within the meaning of such a clause in a policy. Ayres vs. Hartford Ins. Co., 21 Iowa 193. Abbott. See CHANGE OF VENUE; VENUE.

CHANGE OF ABODE. See DOMICIL (Supp.).

CHANGE OF DOMICIL. See DOMICIL (Supp.).

CHANGE OF VENUE. See VENUE.

CHANGER. An officer of the king's mint whose duty it is to exchange coin for bullion. English.

CHAPELRY. The precincts and limits of a chapel; the same thing to a chapel that a parish is to a church. Termes de la Ley. R. & L.

CHAPERON. A hood or bonnet anciently worn by the Knights of the Garter as a part of the habit of that noble order; also, a little escutcheon fixed in the foreheads of horses drawing a hearse in a funeral. R. & L.

CHAPITRE. A summary of such matters as are to be inquired of or presented before justices in eyre, justices of assize, or the peace, in their sessions; also, articles delivered by the justice in his charge to the inquest. Britt. c. 111. R. & L.

CHAPLAIN. (1) An ecclesiastic who performs divine service in a chapel; but more commonly means one who attends upon a king, prince, or other person of quality, for the performance of clerical duties in a private chapel. 4 Co. 90.

(2) A clergyman officially attached to a ship-of-war, to an army (or regiment), or to some public institution for the purpose of performing divine service. R. & L.

CHAPMAN. A cheapener; one that offers as a purchaser; also, a seller; a trader from place to place. R. & L.

CHARGE. See CONSTRUCTION CHARGE (Supp.).

CHARGE AND DISCHARGE. A phrase descriptive of the mode formerly pursued in taking an account before a master in chancery, in which, usually, the complainant first exhibited the items of his claim, in the form of a charge; after which the defendant submitted his discharge, setting forth any contrary claims; and, upon an examination of both of these, a report was made. Dan. Ch. Pr. 1173; Smith Ch. Pr. 569. Abbott.

CHARGE SHEET. The police blotter or daily record of arrests and charges against prisoners. English.

CHARGEANT. Heavy; weighty. English.

CHARGING LIEN. See LIEN, Attorney Lien.

CHARGING ORDER. The name bestowed in English practice, upon an order allowed by Stat. 1 & 2 Vict. ch. 110, §14, and 3 & 4 Vict. ch. 82, to be granted to a judgment creditor, that the property of the judgment debtor in government stock, or in the stock of any public company in England, corporate or otherwise, shall (whether standing in his own name or in the name of any person in trust for him) stand charged for the payment of the amount for which judgment shall have been recovered with interest. 3 Steph. Com. 587, 588. Abbott.

CHARGE. A quantity of lead, consisting of thirty pigs or 2,100 pounds. English.

CHART. A plan used by mariners at sea. English.

CHARTA LIBERTATUM REGNI. The charter of the nation's liberty; applied to Magna Carta as the grantor of liberty. English.

CHARTER. Within the Meaning of the Act of July 15, 1918 (an Amendment to the Shipping Act of 1916): Any agreement, contract, lease, or commitment by which the possession or services of a vessel are secured for a period of time, or for one or more voyages, whether or not a demise of the vessel. 250 U. S. 253.

CHARTER HOUSE. Formerly a convent of Carthusian Monks in London; now a college founded and endowed by Thomas Sutton. The governors are a corporation aggregate without a head, president or superior, all members of equal authority. 3 Steph. Com. (7 Edit.), 14, 97. R. & L.

CHARTERED SHIP. A ship which has been secured by charter party. English.

CHARTERER. A freeholder; one who charters vessels. English.

CHARTOPHYLAX. A keeper of archives; a keeper of records or public instruments; a chartulary; a registrar. English.

CHARUE. A plow. English.

CHAUMPERT. A species of tenure. English.

CHAUNTRY RENTS. Rents paid to the crown by the servants or purchaser of chauntry lands, which are lands given to support a church. English. 22 Car. 11, c. 6.

CHEATERS OR ESCHEATERS. Officers appointed to look after the king's escheats. Great opportunity for fraud and oppression and hence many complaints of misconduct. Cheater came to signify a fraudulent person, and hence the verb "to cheat" was derived. R. & L.

CHEATING OR SWINDLING. See DEPRAUDING (Supp.).

CHECK. v. To control; to restrain; to verify. Original meaning, to stop, derived from expression "check-mate." R. & L.

CHECK. n. An order on a bank to pay a specified sum to the bearer, or persons mentioned, or the latter's order. See CHUCK.

The fact that an instrument purports to be drawn upon a deposit is what constitutes it a check. 275 U. S. 368; Daniels, Negotiable Instruments, 6th ed., section 1569.

CHECKER. One whose business it is, by actual inspection and inquiry, to ascertain, so far as possible, the amount of cement required for specific jobs referred to in specific job contracts, and whether cement shipped under specific job contracts is actually used or required for use under such contracts. 268 U. S. 596. See CEMENT; SPECIFIC JOB CONTRACT (Supp.).

A Scotch abbreviation for exchequer. English.

CHEFE. A head; the head. English.

CHEMIER. The eldest born. English.

CHEVAGE. A sum of money formerly paid by vassals to their lords in acknowledgment of their bondage. It seems also to have signified a sum of money paid to a man of power and might for his protection. Co. Litt. 140a; Termes de la Ley, s. v. R. & L.

CHEVITÆ. The heads at the ends of the ploughed land. English.

CHEZÉ. A homestead or homesfall which is accessory to a house. R. & L.

CHICAGO BOARD OF TRADE. See CALL RULE (Supp.).

CHICANE. The use of tricks and artifice. R. & L.

CHIROGRAPHER OF FINES. An officer of the common pleas who engrossed fines or agreements which put an end to suits over land. English. Ley's Case, 5 Co. 39a; Wms. Seis. 107; Mad. Form. 217. See FINE.

CHIRURGEON. An ancient name of a surgeon.

CHIVALRY. A tenure by knight's service. English.

CHOP-CHURCH. An old term applied to those who exchanged benefices. English.

CHORAL. One who was anciently allowed to sit in the choir of a church. English.

CHOREPISCOPUS. A rural bishop or a bishop's vicar. English.

CHOSE IN ACTION. A chose in action embraces in one sense all rights of action. 235 U. S. 595, 596, quoting 3 McLean 208. See BOND (Supp.).

CHOSEN FREEHOLDERS. A board of county officers, in New Jersey, having charge of the finances of the county, and composed of persons chosen by and representing the several towns or townships of the county. In some states called "county commissioners" or "board of supervisors." R. & L.

CHRENECRUDA. The procedure, under Salic law, by a person unable to pay his debts or fine, of making a rich relative liable for the same. It comprised an application to the relative and the throwing of green herbs upon him. The latter was the completion of the contract and the relative was bound for the obligation. English.

CHRISTIANITATIS CURIA. The court of Christianity. An ecclesiastical court as opposed to a civil or lay tribunal. Burrill.

CHRISTMAS DAY. A festival of the Christian Church, observed on the 25th of December, in memory of the birth of Jesus Christ. When a bill of exchange becomes due on that day, it is payable (in most jurisdictions) on the day preceding. Byles Bills, 11 ed., 206, 284. R. & L.

CHURCHESSET. In Old English Law. A certain portion or measure of wheat anciently paid to the church on St. Martin's Day; paid as well in time of Britons as of the English. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 47, §28. Burrill.

CIBARIA (Lat.). In the Civil Law. Food; victuals. Dig. 34, 1. Burrill.

CIDER. See VINEGAR (Supp.).

CIDER VINEGAR. See VINEGAR (Supp.).

CIPPI. An old English law term for the stocks, an instrument in which the wrists or ankles of petty offenders were confined. R. & L.

CIRCADA. A tribute anciently paid to the bishop or archbishop for visiting churches. R. & L.

CIRCULAR NOTES. See LETTER OF CREDIT.

CIRIC-BRYCE. A violation of church privileges.

Cirle Seat. An ancient church contribution payable on the day of St. Martin's, usually corn. English. See CHURCHESSET (Supp.).

CISTA. A box or chest for containing charters, deeds, or other things. R. & L.

CITIZEN. The term citizen or subject may be broad enough to include corporations of the country whose citizens are in question. 226 U. S. 112; 204 U. S. 359; 8 Wall. 168. Whether it is so inclusive in any particular instance depends upon the intent to be gathered from the context and the general purpose of the whole legislation in which it occurs. 267 U. S. 46; 164 U. S. 689.

CITY. A political subdivision of the state, created as a convenient agency for the exercise of such of the governmental powers of the state as may be entrusted to it. 262 U. S. 185, 186. In the absence of state constitutional provisions safeguarding it to them, municipalities have no inherent right of self-government which is beyond the legislative control of the state. A municipality is merely a department of the state, and the state may withhold, grant, or withdraw powers and privileges as it sees fit. However great or small its sphere of action, it remains the creature of the state exercising and holding powers and privileges subject to the sovereign will. Id., 187; 91 U. S. 544, 545. "Institutions of the kind [municipal corporations] whether called cities, towns, or counties, are the auxiliaries of the state in the important business of municipal rule; but they cannot have the least pretension to sustain their privileges or their existence upon anything like a contract between themselves and the legislature of the state, because there is not and cannot be any reciprocity of stipulation between the parties, and for the further reason that their objects and duties are utterly incompatible with everything partaking of the nature of compact." Id., 187, 188, quoting 100 U. S. 524, 525. See MUNICIPALITY (Supp.).

CITY OF LONDON COURT. A court having a local jurisdiction within the city of London; same as a county court. Stat. 30 & 31 Vict. c. 142, §35. Exclusive jurisdiction in admiralty matters within the city. Rose, Adm. 75; Stat. 31 & 32 Vict. c. 71. See Mayor's Court of London. R. & L.

CIVIL BILL COURT. A tribunal in Ireland with a jurisdiction analogous to that of the county courts in England. Judge is also chairman of quarter sessions and performs the duty of revising barrister. Procedure regulated by the 27 & 28 Vict. c. 99, 28 & 29 Vict. c. 1, and 37 & 38 Vict. c. 65. R. & L.

CIVIL CONTEMPT. See PARDON, POWER OF; CRIMINAL CONTEMPT (Supp.).

CIVIL DEATH. The right of inheritance, freed from demands of creditors, granted by Indiana Rev. Stats. (1881), sections 2483, 2491, to a widow upon the death of her husband, remains contingent during his life and cannot be held to mature at his bankruptcy upon the theory that the adjudication brings about his "civil death." 171 U. S. 187. See CONTRADICTIONS (Supp.).

CIVIL OFFICER. Within the Meaning of Section 6 of Title XI of the Espionage Act of June 15, 1917. The expression "civil officer of the United States duly authorized to enforce or assist in enforcing any law thereof," does not mean an officer in the constitutional sense. When the words "officer of the United States" are employed in the statutes of the United States they are to be taken usually to have the limited constitutional meaning (one appointed either by the president and the senate, the president alone, the courts of law or the heads of departments). 267 U. S. 507.

CIVILIS (Lat.). Civil, as distinguished from criminal. Bract. fol. 101b, 102. Burrill.

CIVILISTA (L. Lat.). In Old English Law. A civil lawyer or civilian. Burrill. Dyer, 267.

CIVILIZATION. A law or judgment which converts a criminal proceeding into a civil one. An improved condition of a people. English.

CLAIM. In the broad juridical sense, a demand of some matter as of right made by one person upon another, to do or to forbear to do some act or thing as a matter of duty. 270 U. S. 345; 16 Pet. 615.

Within the Meaning of Section 35 of the Penal Code, as Amended by the Act of October 23, 1928, relating to the payment or approval of a "claim upon or against" the government. The word "claim" relates solely to the payment or approval of a claim for money or property to which a right is asserted against the government, based upon the government's own liability to the claimant. And obviously it does not include an application for the entry and delivery of non-dutiable merchandise, as to which no claim is asserted against the government, to which the government makes no claim, and which is merely in the temporary possession of an agent of the government for delivery to the person who may be entitled to its possession. This is not the assertion of a "claim upon or against" the government, within the meaning of the statute; and the delivery of the possession is not the "approval" of such a claim. Id., 346.

CLAM. Hidden; secretly; covertly; clandestinely. English.

CLAMAMENT ET AUDITUM INFRA QUATUOR PARIETES. Crying and being heard within the four walls; applied where a man married a woman seized in fee, and a child was born, which was heard to cry. The mother being alive at the birth and the child being capable of inheritance, gave the father an inchoate right as tenant in courtesy. English.

CLAMEA ADMITTENDA IN ITINERE PER ATTORNATUM. An ancient writ directing the justices in eyre to admit the claim of a person in king's service to appear by attorney. English.

CLARIFICATIO. A glorification. In Old Scotch Law. A making clear; the purging or clearing of an assize. English.

CLASSIARIUS. A seaman or sea soldier. English.

CLASSICI. In the Roman Law. Persons employed in servile duties on board of vessels. Cod. 11, 12. Burrill.

CLASSIFICATION. Classification is the most inveterate of our reasoning processes. We can scarcely think or speak without consciously or unconsciously exercising it. It must therefore obtain in and determine legislation; but it must regard real resemblances and real differences between things, and persons, and class them in accordance with their pertinence to the purpose in hand. Classification is said to be the development of the philosophic thought of the world and is opening the door to legalized experiment. 257 U. S. 337, 338. Classification "must always rest upon some difference which bears a reasonable and just relation to the act in respect to which the classification is proposed, and can never be made arbitrarily and without such basis." Id., quoting 165 U. S. 155. "While reasonable classification is permitted, without doing violence to the equal protection of the laws, such classification must be based upon some real and substantial distinction, bearing a reasonable and just relation to the things in respect to which such classification is imposed; and classification cannot be arbitrarily made without any substantial basis." Id., quoting 216 U. S. 417. See EQUAL PROTECTION OF THE LAWS (Supp.).

In the Practice of the English Chancery Division, where there are several parties to an administration action including those who have been served with notice of the decree or judgment and it appears to the judge that any of them form a class having the same interest, he may require them to be represented by one solicitor, in order to prevent the expense of each of them attending by separate solicitors. This is termed "classifying."

In practice also applied to the direction of chief clerk as to which of the parties are to attend on each of the accounts and inquiries directed by the judgment. Consol. Orders XXX, 20; Dan. Ch. Fr. 1088. R. & L.

COMPASSING. Imagining. See IMAGINE.

COMPATERNITY. Spiritual affinity. R. & L.

COMPELLATIVUS. An adversary or accuser. R. & L.

COMPENDIUM. An abridgement. R. & L.

COMPENSATION. Within the Meaning of Section 4527, U. S. Revised Statutes. The word "compensation" distinctly indicates that payment of a sum equal to one month's wages was intended to constitute the remedy for invasion of a seaman's right through breach of his contract of employment in certain circumstances. "Damages consist in compensation for loss sustained."

By the general system of our law, for every invasion of right there is a remedy, and that remedy is compensation. This compensation is furnished in the damages which are awarded." 275 U. S. 391; Sedgwick's Damages, 9th Ed., Vol. 1, p. 24; 167 U. S. 548.

Within the Meaning of Section 1, Article III of the Constitution, providing that the judges both of the supreme and inferior courts shall receive for their services a compensation which shall not be diminished during their continuance in office. The words and history of the clause indicate that the purpose was to impose upon congress the duty definitely to declare what sum shall be received by each judge out of the public funds and the times for payment. When this duty has been complied with the amount specified becomes the compensation which is protected against diminution during his continuance in office. 268 U. S. 508, 509. See JUST COMPENSATION (Supp.).

COMPETENT JURISDICTION. See ANY DISTRICT COURT OF THE UNITED STATES (Supp.).

COMPLETE. adj. Full; entire. See INCHOATE; PERFECT.

COMPLICE. One who is united with another in an ill-design; an associate; a confederate; an accomplice. R. & L. See ACCOMPLICE.

COMPOS SUI. Having control over one's self; having the use of one's limbs or the power of bodily motion. English.

COMPOSITION. A settlement by the bankrupt with his creditors. In a measure, the composition supersedes, and is outside of, the bankruptcy proceedings. 265 U. S. 271; 237 U. S. 454. It originates in a voluntary offer by the bankrupt; and results, in the main, from voluntary acceptance by his creditors. It cannot be confirmed unless there has been such acceptance by the requisite majority. When confirmed the bankrupt is discharged from all debts "other than those agreed to be paid by the terms of the composition and those not affected by a discharge." Id., quoting the Bankruptcy Act, section 14c. Thus, the composition binds creditors with scheduled claims, although they do not prove. It may be effected before the adjudication. Where the assets have passed to the trustee pursuant to the adjudication, they are revested in the bankrupt. Id.

In the normal case, the bankrupt is impelled by vital interests, not only to make the offer promptly, but to expedite confirmation. Interruption incident to delay necessarily impairs the value of a business as a going concern. Thus, the composition is usually carried through within the year. Creditors who have failed to prove their claims before confirmation (from inadvertence or because of their doubt whether it was worth the trouble and expense) are usually spurred to activity by notice that money on deposit awaits their application. The cases are rare in which a scheduled creditor who has had due notice fails to call within the year, for the money awaiting him.

Where the distribution is of the bankrupt estate, each creditor has an interest in the claim which any other creditor may assert. He is interested in limiting the amount of claims to be allowed, because the greater the aggregate, the smaller (except where there is a surplus) will be his dividend. Each creditor is interested, also, in limiting the time within which others may prove, because distribution cannot be made until the close of that period. But where there is a composition, neither the amount which a creditor receives, nor the time when he receives it, can be affected by the amount of others' claims, or by the time of proof, or by their failure to prove. The rights of each creditor are fixed by the terms of the debtor's offer, subject only to its confirmation and the judge's order of distribution. Nor can the time of proof of claims, as distinguished from their allowance, be of legitimate interest to the bankrupt. His rights, also, are fixed by the offer, unless where the legality or the amount of a claim is questioned. Id., 272, 273. See also MUSICAL COMPOSITION (Supp.).

COMPOSITO MENSUARUM. The composition or ordinance of weights and measures; the title of an ancient ordinance mentioned in Stat. 23 Hen. VIII. c. 4. The Stat. 51 Hen. III. establishing a standard of weights and measures. English.

COMPOSITO ULNARUM ET PETTICARUM. The statutes of ells and perches; the title of an English statute establishing a standard of measures. English.

COMPOST. Several sorts of soil or earth, and other matters mixed, in order to make a superior sort of mould for fertilizing land. R. & L. 2 Chit. 655, 656.

COMPOTARIUS. In Old English Law. A party accounting. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 71, §17. Burrill.

COMPOUND. Composed of two or more elements; to make a compromise or settlement; to give or accept pay for an offence or injury; to agree for a consideration to refrain from prosecution; to add interest and principal together; to take part in the satisfaction of the whole. English. See COMPOUND INTEREST; COMPOUNDING A FELONY.

COMPROMISSUM. A submission to arbitration. R. & L. See COMPROMISE.

COMPTE. A count; an earl; one who had both judicial and military jurisdiction over a defined district. English.

COMPTE ARRETE. An account stated in writing and acknowledged to be correct on its face by the party against whom it is stated. Chevalier vs. Hyams, 9 La. Ann. 484. Abbott.

COMPTER. The name of a prison in London. 1 Show. 162.

In Scotch Law. An accounting party. Burrill.

COMPTROLLER IN BANKRUPTCY. An officer in England whose duty it is to receive from the trustees in each bankruptcy his accounts and periodical statements, showing the proceedings in the bankruptcy; and also to call the trustee to account for any misfeasance, neglect, or omission in the discharge of his duties. Robs. Bank. 13; Bankr. Act, 1869, §55. R. & L.

COMPUTO. To sum up; to reckon; to compute. A writ to compel a bailiff, guardian, receiver, or accountant to yield up his account. English. Founded on Stat. of Westminster 11, c. 12. Abolished by Com. Laws. Pro. Act, 1852, §92.

CON BUENA FE. In Spanish Law. With (or in) good faith. White's New Recop. b. 2, tit. 2, ch. 8. R. & L.

CONACRE. In Irish Practice. The payment of wages in land, the rent being worked out in labor at a money valuation. R. & L.

CONATUS QUID SIT, NON DEFINITUR IN JURE (2 Buls. 277). What an attempt is, is not defined in law. R. & L.

CONCEDER (Fr.). To grant. See CONCESSION.

CONCEDO (L. Lat.). In Old English Law. I grant. An emphatic word in Anglo-Saxon grants of land. Heming 158, 215, 228. A word used in old statutes—merchants. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 64, §3. Burrill.

CONCEPTION. The vitalization of the ovule or egg in the womb of the female by contact with the generative fluid of the male. English.

CONCEPTUM. Theft, where the property stolen was found upon the thief in the presence of witnesses. R. & L.

CONCESSIO. See CONSESSIMUS.

CONCESSION. Within the Meaning of the Elkins Act, Section 1, which made it unlawful for anyone to receive any concession in respect of transportation of any property in interstate commerce by a common carrier whereby any advantage is given or any discrimination is practiced. The words "advantage," "concession," and "discrimination" in the statute must be construed to mean unlawful concession, unlawful advantage, unlawful discrimination. 270 U. S. 518. The purpose of congress in the Elkins law was to cut up by the roots every form of discrimination, favoritism, and inequality. Id., 519; 226 U. S. 309; 219 U. S. 478; 209 U. S. 72; 200 U. S. 391.

CONCESSIT SOLVERE. A form of action of debt on simple contract which lies by custom in the Mayor's Court of London and Bristol; to the effect that defendant on a fictitious date, in consideration of divers fictitious sums of money due and owing to plaintiff, granted and agreed to pay to plaintiff sum sued for, but has not done so. 1 Wms. Saund. 94 (Turbill's Case). R. & L.

CONCESSUM. Granted; conceded; allowed. Often used in old books denoting the assent of the court to the doctrine or position laid down on the argument of a cause. Burrill.

CONCILIABULUM (Lat.). A council house. Towns. Pl. 184. Burrill.

CONCILIATION. In English Law. The settling without litigation of disputes between railway companies and consignors of goods. Acts 1888, Railway and Canal Traffic; 1896, Conciliation Act. Byrne.

In French Law. Intending litigants convened by a judge, who endeavors to reconcile them. See RECONCILIATION.

CONCIONATOR (L. Lat.). In Old Records. A common councilman; a freeman called to a legislative hall or assembly. Burrill.

CONCLUDE. To close or end; to terminate. (1) Of mental deliberation, as conclusions of law or fact; or (2) of a written instrument as the conclusion of an indictment. Abbott. See CONCLUSION.

CONCLUSION OF THE WAR. Within the Meaning of the War-Time Prohibition Act. Does not mean cessation of hostilities. Nor does it mean the date when the treaty of peace should be signed, since by the constitution a treaty is only a proposal until approved by the senate. 251 U. S. 167.

CONCORDIA (Lat.). In Old English Law. An agreement or concord. Fleta, lib. 5, c. 3, §5. The agreement or unanimity of a jury. Fleta, lib. 4, c. 9, §2. Burrill.

CONCORDIA DISCORDANTIUM CANONUM (Lat.). The harmony of discordant canons; a collection of ecclesiastical constitutions made by Gratian, an Italian monk, A. D. 1151. 1 Bl. Com. 82. Burrill.

CONCRETE. See DRY CONCRETE; WET CONCRETE; MUSH CONCRETE (Supp.).

CONCURATOR. In the Civil Law. A joint or co-curator, or guardian. R. & L.

CONCURSUS. In the Civil Law. (1) A running together; a collision. (2) A concurrence, or meeting. R. & L.

CONCUSS. In Scotch Law. To coerce. Shaw's R. 322. Burrill.

CONCUSSIO. In the Civil Law. Extortion by threats of violence. Dig. 47, 13. Burrill. See CONCUSSION.

CONDEMNATION MONEY. The party who fails in a suit or action is sometimes said to be condemned in the action, whence the damages to which such failure has made him liable used to be frequently called "condemnation money." 6 Blackf. (Ind.), 8. R. & L.

CONDESCENDENCE. In Scotch Law. A statement setting forth the grounds on which a plaintiff rests his right of recovery. English.

CONDITIONAL SALE. A contract of conditional sale is one making full payment of the purchase price a condition precedent to the passing of title. 239 U. S. 271.

There is a real distinction between a conditional sale and an absolute sale with a mortgage back. Under the former the vendor remains the owner, subject to the vendee's right to acquire the title by complying with the stipulated condition; while under the latter, the vendee immediately becomes the owner, subject to the lien created by the mortgage. Id., 15 Kansas 600; 16 Kansas 65; 51 Kansas 544; 52 Kansas 185; 207 Fed. Rep. 535. The question whether a particular contract shows one or the other turns upon the ruling intention of the parties as disclosed by the entire contract, and not upon any single provision separately considered. Id., 272.

CONDOMINIA. In the Civil Law. Co-ownership or limited ownerships, such as emphyteusis, superficies, pignus, hypotheca, usufructus, usus, and habitatio. These were more than mere jura in re aliena, being portion of the dominium itself. R. & L.

CONDONE. See CONDONATION.

CONDUCTI ACTIO (Lat.). In the Civil Law. An action which the hirer of a thing might have against the letter. Inst. 3, 25, Pr. 2. Burrill. See CONDUCTIO.

CONDUCTOR OPERARUM. The hirer of labor; the conductor of works, operations. English.

CONFARREATIO. In Roman Law. A sacrificial rite resorted to by marrying persons of high patrician or priestly degree, for the purpose of clothing the husband with the manus over his wife; civil modes of effecting same were comptio (formal) and usus mulieris (informal). R. & L.

CONFESS, BILL TAKEN PRO. See PRO CONFESSO, BILL TAKEN (Supp.).

CONFESS, CONFESSIO. See CONFESSION.

CONFESSION OF JUDGMENT. An admission of the jurisdiction of the court, the truth of the plaintiff's cause of action and assent to the judgment being entered.

In Criminal Law. A plea of guilty. English. See CONFESSION.

CONFESSORIA ACTIO (Lat.). In the Civil Law. An action for enforcing a servitude. 1 Mackeld. Civil Law, 352, §321. Burrill.

CONFINEMENT. An act of congress, April 30, 1790. §12. 1 Stat. at L. 115, declares confinement of a master of a vessel, by the seamen, punishable. For further decisions and meanings of the word, see United States vs. Sharp, Pet. C. Ct. 118; United States vs. Thompson, 1 Sumn. 168; United States vs. Savage, 5 Mas. 460; United States vs. Laurence, 1 Cranch C. Ct. 94. Abbott.

CONFIRM. To complete or establish that which was imperfect or uncertain; to ratify what has been done without authority or insufficiently. Abbott. See CONFIRMATION.

CONFIRMAVI (Lat.). I have confirmed. The emphatic word in the ancient deeds of confirmation. Fleta, lib. 3, c. 14, §5. Burrill.

CONFISCABLE. Liable to forfeiture. See CONFISCATE.

CONFISCATION ACTS. Acts of the U. S. congress of August 6, 1861, and July 17, 1862, making the property of rebels the subject of capture and prize. English.

CONFISK. Same as Confiscate. English.

CONFLICT OF PRESUMPTIONS. In this conflict certain rules are applicable, viz.: (1) Special take precedence over general presumptions; (2) constant of casual ones; (3) presume in favor of innocence; (4) of legality; (5) of validity; and when these rules fail, the matter is said to be at large. R. & L.

CONFORMITY. In English Ecclesiastical Law. Adherence to the doctrines and usages of the Church of England. R. & L.

In Practice. See BILL OF CONFORMITY.

CONFRAIRIE. A fraternity, brotherhood, or society. English.

CONFRERES. Brethren in a religious house; fellows of one and the same society. R. & L.

CONGILDONES. Fellow members of a guild. English.

CONGRESS. See GOVERNMENTAL POWER; INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION (Supp.).

CONGRESS, CONTINENTAL. Congress held by American colonies, except Georgia, from Sept. 5, 1774, to Oct. 26, 1774; also congress held by the thirteen colonies from May 10, 1775, to Dec. 12, 1776; also a body which met from Dec. 20, 1776, to March 1, 1781. English.

CONGRESSUS. A personal examination of a husband charged by his wife with being sexually impotent. English.

CONGUIS. A measure containing a little more than a gallon. R. & L.

CONJECTIO. In the Civil Law. A throwing together. e. g., a grouping of facts and a presumption deduced therefrom. R. & L.

CONJUEX. In Old English Law. An associate judge. Bract. fol. 403. Burrill.

CONJUGIUM (Lat.). One of the names of marriage among the Romans. Taylor's Civ. Law, 284. Burrill.

CONJUNCT. In Scotch Law. Joint. Ersk. Inst. b. 3, tit. 8, §34. Burrill.

CONJUNCTA (Lat.). In Civil Law. Things joined together or united; as distinguished from disjuncta, things disjoined or separated. Dig. 50, 16, 53. Burrill.

CONJUNCTIM ET DIVISIM (L. Lat.). In Old English Law. Jointly and severally. Bract. fol. 19. Burrill.

CONJUNCTIO (Lat.). In the Civil Law. Conjunction; a connection of words in a sentence. Dig. 50, 16, 29, 142. Burrill.

CONJURATOR. One who swears with or is sworn with others; one bound by oath with others; a compurgator. English.

CONNECTION. Any relation, organic or conventional, by which one society is linked or united to another. Allison vs. Smith, 16 Mich. 405. More vague term than relations; unless also relations, connections never take by statute of distribution. Storer vs. Wheatley, 1 Pa. St. 506. See RELATIONS.

Guilty Connection. When applied to a man and woman imports a carnal connection. State vs. George, 7 Ired. L. 321. Abbott.

CONPOSSESSIO (Lat.). In Modern Civil Law. A joint possession. Mackelday's Civ. Law, 245, §236. Burrill.

CONQUEREUR (L. Fr.). In Norman and Old English Law. The first purchaser of an estate; he who first brought an estate into his family. Grand Const. Gloss. c. 25, p. 40; 2 Bl. Com. 243. Burrill.

CONQUEROR. In Old English and Scotch Law. The first purchaser of an estate; he who brought it into the family owning it. 2 Bl. Com. 242, 243. Burrill.

CONQUESTOR. Conqueror; one of the titles given William the Conqueror. English.

CONQUISITIO (L. Lat.). In Feudal and Old English Law. Acquisition. 2 Bl. Com. 242. Burrill.

CONQUISITOR (L. Lat.). In Feudal and Old English Law. Acquisition. 2 Bl. Com. 242. Burrill.

CONSCIENCE, COURTS OF. Tribunals for recovery of small debts, by act of parliament in city of London and other towns. 5 & 6 Wm. IV. c. 94; 7 & 8 Vict. 96. County courts have superseded them. R. & L.

CONSCIENCE OF THE COURT. The mind of the judge. English.

CONSCIENCE, LIBERTY OF. See LIBERTY OF CONSCIENCE (Supp.).

CONSCIENTIA REI ALIENI. In Scotch Law. The knowledge that property held by one belongs to another. English.

CONSECRATION. Making a bishop by imposition of hands. R. & L.

CONSEIL JUDICIAIRE. In French Law. When a person has been subjected to an interdiction on the ground of his insane extravagance, but interdiction is not absolute but limited only, the court of first instance, which grants the interdiction, appoints a council, with whose assistance the party may bring or defend action, or compromise the same, alienate his estate, make or incur loans, and the like. R. & L.

CONSEQUENTIAL CONTEMPT. See CONTEMPT.

CONSIDERATUR. It is considered. See CONSIDERATUR EST PER CURIAM.

CONSISTING OF. Words excluding all but what is specified. English.

CONSISTORIUM (Lat.). The state council of the Roman emperors. 1 Mackeld. Civ. Law, 39, §49. Burrill.

CONSOBRINI. A civil law term for cousins-german, or first cousins. R. & L.

CONSOLS. Funds formed by consolidation (of which word it is an abbreviation) of different annuities, which had been severally formed into a capital. R. & L. See CONSOLIDATED FUND.

CONSORTSHIP. Companionship; a vessel that keeps with another on a voyage; a contract by the owners of wrecking vessels to share money obtained by salvage without regard to which earned the same. English.

CONSPIRACY, CRIME OF. Within the Meaning of Section 5440 of the Revised Statutes. When two or more persons conspire either to commit any offense against the United States, or to defraud the United States in any manner or for any purpose, and one or more of such parties do any act to effect the object of the conspiracy. 225 U. S. 357. While the combination of minds in an unlawful purpose is the foundation of the offense, an overt act is necessary to complete it. Id., citing 100 U. S. 33.

CONSPIRATIONE. See DE CONSPIRATIONE (Supp.).

CONSTAT. It is certain; it appears. In England, a certificate that a matter appears of record; a certified copy under the great seal of the enrollment of letters patent. English.

CONSTITUTIONES. Laws promulgated by the Roman emperor. Had power of irresponsible enactment by virtue of a certain lex regia whereby he was made the fountain of justice and of mercy. R. & L.

CONSTRUCT. To build; erect; to put together, ready for use. Word in statutes, see Attorney-General vs. Ware River R. R. Co., 115 Mass. 400; Troy Co. vs. Odiome, 17 How. 72; the Ferax, Sprague, 180; Donnell vs. the Starlight, 103 Mass. 227. Abbott.

CONSTRUCTION. Explanation or interpretation; generally of writings. See WORDS.

CONSTRUCTION, COURT OF. In England, a court of equity or common law, with regard to wills; as opposed to the court of probate, whose duty is to decide whether the instrument be a will or not. R. & L. See PROBATE OF A WILL.

CONSTRUCTION CHARGE. The same kind of work under one set of facts may be chargeable to construction and under a different set of facts may be chargeable to maintenance and operation. 268 U. S. 54; 119 Ky. 301, 302. For example, headgates originally placed are charged properly to construction; but it does not follow that if an original headgate be swept away, its replacement, though requiring exactly the same kind of materials and work, may not be charged to operation and maintenance. Id.

CONSTRUCTIVE PRESENCE. There may be a constructive presence in a state, distinct from personal presence, by which a crime committed in another state may be consummated, and render the person consummating it punishable at that place. 225 U. S. 362. To speak of constructive presence is to use the language of fiction, and so to hinder precise analysis. When a man is said to be constructively present where the consequences of an act done elsewhere are felt, it is meant that for some special purpose he will be treated as he would have been treated if he had been present, although he was not. For instance, if a man acting in one state sets forces in motion that kill a man in another, or produces or induces some consequence in that other that it regards as very hurtful and wishes to prevent, the latter state is very likely to say that if it can catch him it will punish him, although he was not subject to its laws when he did act. Id., 386, citing 221 U. S. 285. But as states usually confine their threats to those within the jurisdiction at the time of the act (213 U. S. 356), the symmetry of general theory is preserved by saying that the offender was constructively present in the case supposed. Id., citing 202 U. S. 389. Obviously, the use of this fiction or form of words must not be pushed to such a point in the administration of the national law as to transgress the requirement of the constitution that the trial of crimes shall be held in the state and district where the crimes shall have been committed. Id.

CONSTRUE. To obtain the meaning of an instrument or statute by arrangement and inference. English.

CONSTUPRATE. To ravish. See RAPE.

CONSUETUDINES. Customs. English.

CONSUETUDINIBUS ET SERVICIIS. A writ of right close, which lay against a tenant who deformed his lord of the rent or service due to him. F. N. B. 151; New Nat. Brev. 330; Reg. Orig. 159. R. & L.

CONSULTA ECCLESIA. A church full or provided for. R. & L.

CONSULTARY RESPONSE. The opinion of a court of law on a special case. R. & L.

CONSULTO. In Civil Law. With design; with intent. English.

CONSUMMATION. The completion of a thing. See CONSUMMATE.

CONTEMNER. One who contemns; one who has committed contempt of court. English. See CONTEMPT.

CONTEMPORANEOUS EXPOSITION. A construction after taking into consideration the time and circumstances, or one made soon after a statute was enacted, or an instrument writing executed. English. See CONTEMPORANEOUS CONSTRUCTION, DOCTRINE OF.

CONTEMPT. The power of contempt which a judge must have and exercise in protecting the due and orderly administration of justice and in maintaining the authority and dignity of the court is most important and indispensable. But its exercise is a delicate one and care is needed to avoid arbitrary or oppressive conclusions. This rule of caution is more mandatory where the contempt charged has in it the element of personal criticism or attack upon the judge. The judge must banish the slightest personal impulse to reprisal, but he should not bend backward and injure the authority of the court by too great leniency. The substitution of another judge would avoid either tendency, but it is not always possible. Of course where acts of contempt are palpably aggravated by a personal attack upon the judge in order to drive the judge out of the case for ulterior reasons, the scheme should not be permitted to succeed. But attempts of this kind are rare. All of such cases, however, present difficult questions for the judge. Where conditions do not make it impracticable, or where the delay may not injure public or private right, a judge called upon to act in a case of contempt by personal attack upon him, may, without finching from his duty, properly ask that one of his fellow judges take his place. 267 U. S. 539; 299 Fed. 285; 237 Fed. 988. See CRIMINAL CONTEMPT; IN OPEN COURT; PARDON, POWER OF (Supp.).

CONTEMPT OF CONGRESS, LEGISLATURE, OR PARLIAMENT. Whatever obstructs or tends to obstruct the due course of proceeding of either house, or grossly reflects on the character of a member, or imputes to him what would be a libel to impute to an ordinary person, is contempt of house, and thereby a breach of privilege. Shortt Copyr. 344, 351. R. & L. See CONTEMPT.

CONTERMINOUS. Adjoining; having the same boundary; co-terminous. English.

CONTINENCIA. Spanish Law. Continuity or unity of the proceedings in a cause. White's New Recop. b. 3, tit. 6, ch. 1. Burrill.

CONTINENS. In Civil Law. Continued; continuous; holding together; joined together. Dig. 50, 16, 2, Pr. Burrill.

CONTINENTAL CONGRESS. See CONGRESS, CONTINENTAL (Supp.).

CONTINENTIA. In Roman Law. Held together by a common wall, as buildings. English.

CONTRACT. Contract in Restraint of Trade. In a very remote period, the words "contract in restraint of trade" in England came to refer to some voluntary restraint put by contract by an individual on his right to carry on his trade or calling. Originally all such contracts were considered to be illegal, because it was deemed they were injurious to the public as well as to the individuals who made them. In the interest of the freedom of individuals to contract, this doctrine was modified so that it was only when a restraint by contract was so general as to be co-terminous with the kingdom that it was treated as void. That is to say, if the restraint was partial in its operation and was otherwise reasonable the contract was held to be valid. 221 U. S. 51. See MONOPOLY; PUBLIC POLICY; RETROCESSION CONTRACTS; SPECIFIC JOB CONTRACT.
Implied in Fact. A contract inferred from the circumstances or acts of the parties; but an express contract speaks for itself and leaves no place for implications. 263 U. S. 192; 58 Conn. 117; 139 Mass. 28.

Within the Meaning of Section 10 of Article I of the Constitution. An agreement of two or more minds, upon sufficient consideration, to do or not to do certain acts. 258 U. S. 146. Mutual assent (express or implied) to its terms is of its very essence. Id.; 146 U. S. 169; 140 U. S. 340; 131 U. S. 414; 109 U. S. 288; 21 Wall. 203. A purely statutory right of a landowner to recover damages resulting to his property from a change in the grade of a street upon which it abuts is not a right of contract within the meaning of the Contract Clause of the constitution. Id., 145.

CONTRACT OF CONDITIONAL SALE. See CONDITIONAL SALE (Supp.).

CONTRACTOR. See EMPLOYEE (Supp.).

CONTRACTUS. A drawing together. A meeting of minds. Anderson. See CONTRACT.

Ex contractu. By virtue of a contract; applied to a right or duty founded upon a contract relation. Anderson.

CONTRADICTION IN TERMS. A phrase in which the parts are expressly inconsistent, as, e. g., "an innocent murder," "a fee simple for life." R. & L.

CONTRAINDTE PAR CORPS. In French Law. The civil process of arrest of a person; imposed on vendors falsely representing their property to be unencumbered, or on persons mortgaging property which they are aware does not belong to them, and in other cases of moral heinousness. R. & L.

CONTRA-LIGATIO. Counter-obligation; counter-binding. English.

CONTRAMANDATIO PLACITI. A respiting or giving a defendant further time to answer, or a countermand of what was formerly ordered. Leg. Hen. I. c. 59. R. & L.

CONTRAMANDATUM. A lawful excuse, which a defendant in a suit by attorney alleges for himself to show that the plaintiff has no cause for complaint. R. & L.

CONTRAPLACITUM (L. Lat.). In Old English Law. A counter plea. Towns. Pl. 61. Burrill.

CONTRAPOSITO (L. Lat.). In Old English Law. A plea or answer; a counter-position. Burrill.

CONTRARIENTS. Name applied to the barons who took part against Edward II. of England. English.

CONTRAT. In French Law. Of following varieties: (1) Bilateral where each party is bound to the other to do what is just and proper; (2) Unilateral, where one side only is bound; (3) Communitif, where one does to the other something which is supposed to be the equivalent for what the other does to him; (4) Aléatoire, where the consideration for the act of the one is a mere chance; (5) Contrat de bienfaisance, where the one party procures to the other a purely gratuitous benefit; (6) Contrat à titre onéreux, where each party is bound under some duty to the other. R. & L.

CONTRATALLIA (L. Lat.). In Old English Law. A counter-tally; a term used in the exchequer. Mem. in Scacc.; M. 26 Edw. I. Burrill.

CONTRATENERE (L. Lat.). To hold against; to withhold. Burrill.

CONTRAVENING EQUITY. See EQUITY.

CONTRACTARE (Lat.). In Civil Law. To handle; to take hold of; to meddle with. In Old English Law. To treat. Fleta, lib. 1. c. 17, ¶4. Burrill.

CONTRIBUTE. To furnish one's share toward money or supplies necessary to meet an obligation or prosecute an enterprise of himself and others. Abbott. See CONTRIBUTION.

CONTRIBUTIO FACCENDA. A writ that lay where tenants in common were bound to do some act, and one of them was put to the whole burthen, to compel the rest to make their contribution. Reg. Orig. 175; F. N. B. 162. R. & L.

CONTRIBUTORY INFRINGEMENT. The intentional aiding of one person by another in the unlawful making or selling or using of a patented invention. 224 U. S. 34, 35, quoting 72 Fed. Rep. 1017. See also, 29 Fed. Cases 79; 92 Fed. Rep. 375; 80 Fed. Rep. 712; 92 Fed. Rep. 516.

CONTROLMENT. In Old English Law. The controlling or checking of another officer's account; the keeping of a counter-roll; "the receipt, controlment or payment of the king's money." Stat. 5 Edw. VI. c. 16. Burrill.

CONTROVERSIES. Within the Meaning of Section 24a of the Bankruptcy Act. Controversies arising in bankruptcy proceedings include those matters arising in the course of a bankruptcy proceeding, which are not mere steps in the ordinary administration of the bankrupt estate, but present, by intervention or otherwise, distinct and separable issues between the trustee and adverse claimants concerning the right and title to the bankrupt's estate. 171 U. S. 180, 181; 242 U. S. 109; 222 U. S. 118; 213 U. S. 234; 194 U. S. 296. In such "controversies" the decrees of the court of bankruptcy may be reviewed by appeals which bring up the whole matter and open both the facts and the law for consideration. Id.; 228 U. S. 165; 218 U. S. 302. Distinguish between this and "proceedings" in bankruptcy, which see.

COTUTOR. In the Civil Law. A co-tutor. R. & L.

CONUSEE. See COGNIZEE.

CONVENABLE. In Old English Law. Agreeable, convenient, or suitable. R. & L.

CONVENIENT. Reasonable; proper. English. 7 Man. & Gr. 41 arg.

CONVENT (Lat.). In Civil and Old English Law. It is agreed; it was agreed. Dig. 50, 17, 23; Bract. fol. 73b. Burrill.

CONVENT. The fraternity of a religious house, as of an abbey or priory. Bract. fol. 16, 347. Frequently written convent. Litt. Sect. 133. Burrill.

CONVENTIONE. A writ for the breach of any covenant in writing, whether real or personal. Reg. Orig. 115; F. N. B. 145. R. & L.

CONVENTUAL CHURCH. That which consists of regular clerks, professing some order of religion, or of a dean and chapter, or other societies or spiritual men. R. & L.

CONVENTUALS. Religious men united in a convent or religious house. Cowell; R. & L.

CONVENTUS. In Old English Law. An assembly; one of the ancient names of the English Parliament. 1 Bl. Com. 148. A convent. Bract. fol. 16, 347. Burrill.

CONVERSANTES (L. Lat.). In Old English Law. Conversant or dwelling; commorant. Stat. Marlbr. c. 10; 2 Inst. 122. Burrill.

CONVERSATION. Intimate association; sexual intercourse. Criminal conversation is adultery, regarded as an injury to the husband, entitling him to damages in a civil action. 3 Bl. Com. 139. Anderson.

CONVERSE. The transposition of the subject and predicate in a proposition; as "Everything is good in its place"; converse, "Nothing is good which is not in its place." Wharton; R. & L.

CO-OPERATION. Combined action of numbers; (1) when several help each other in same employment; (2) when several help each other in different employments. Termed "simple co-operation" and "complex co-operation." Mill Pol. Ec. 142. R. & L.

COOPERTIO. The head or branches of a tree cut down; though coopertio arborum is rather the bark of timber trees felled, and the chumps and broken wood. Cowell; R. & L.

COOPERTURA. A thicket or covert of wood. R. & L.

CO-OPTATION. Mutual chance; selection; the act of selecting one to fill a vacant membership. English.

CO-ORDINATE, SUBORDINATE. Terms often used to ascertain the doubtful meaning of clauses in a statute. If two, one grammatically governed by the other, it is said to be "subordinate" to it, but if both are equally governed by some third clause, the two are called "co-ordinate." Wharton; R. & L.

COPARTICEPS. See COPARCENERS.

COPEMAN, COPESMAN. Same as chapman, a peddler. English.

COPIA (L. Lat.). In Old English Law. A copy. Clerk's Prax. Cur. Adm. tit. 48. Opportunity or means of access. Cod. 4, 21, 21. Burrill.

COPIA LIBELLI DELIBERANDA. A writ that lay where a man could not get a copy of a libel at the hands of a spiritual judge, to have the same delivered to him. Reg. Orig. 51. R. & L.

COPIA VERA (L. Lat.). In Scotch Practice. A true copy. Words written at the top of copies of instruments. 3 How. St. Trials, 427, 430, 432. Burrill.

COPPER AND SCALES. See MANCI-PATIO.

COPPICE or COPSE. A small wood, consisting of underwood which may be cut at twelve or fifteen years' growth for fuel. R. & L.

COPULA. That which joins together or binds fast; a band, rope, line, tie; a bond; a connection; carnal connection. English.

COPY. A reproduction or duplication of a thing. 209 U. S. 17. A copy is that which comes so near to the original as to give to every person seeing it the idea created by the original. Id., quoting 5 B. & A. 743.

Of a Musical Composition. A written or printed record of it in intelligible notation (Id., quoting an expert in the case). It may be true that in a broad sense a mechanical instrument which reproduces a tune copies it; but this is a strained and artificial meaning. When the combination of musical sounds is reproduced to the ear it is the original tune as conceived by the author which is heard. These musical tones are not a copy which appeals to the eye. In no sense can musical sounds which reach us through the sense of hearing be said to be copies as that term is generally understood. Id. See MUSICAL COMPOSITION; PERFORATED ROLLS (Supp.).

CORIUM FORISFACERE. To forfeit one's skin; applied to a person condemned to be whipped; the ancient punishment of a servant. R. & L.

CORNER. A monopoly of the actual supply of a commodity (e. g., grain) in commerce; it is not a monopoly of contracts only. 262 U. S. 39. See RUNNING A CORNER (Supp.).

Combination for purpose of holding or controlling the great bulk of any one commodity which is on the market, in order to advance the price unnaturally and unreasonably.

An angle made by two boundary lines at their point of intersection. Corner in stocks. 101 Mass. 145. Of Survey. 2 Wheel. Am. C. L. 484. R. & L.

CORODIO NABENDO. A writ to exact a corody of an abbey or religious house. English. See CORODY.

CORODIUM. See CORODY.

COROLLARY. A collateral consequence, deduction, or influence. R. & L.

COROMARE (L. Lat.). In Old Records. To give the tonsure, which was done on the crown, or in the form of a crown; to make a man a priest. Burrill.

CORONA. A garland, wreath, or crown. (In Old English, corone, corown.) English.

CORONA MALA. The clergy who abused their character. English.

CORPORATE NAME. See TRADE NAME (Supp.).

CORPORATE SECURITIES. Railroad equipment certificates issued by a trust company as security for money advanced by a syndicate to purchase equipment leased by the trust company to a railroad under contract for periodical payments, as rentals, and ultimate acquisition of title by the latter, and which are payable with interest to bearer or registered holder from the rentals thus to be paid by the railroad, are in the category of "instruments issued by any corporation known generally as corporate securities" within Title XI, section 1100 and schedule A (1) of the Act of February 24, 1919, c. 18. 267 U. S. 20.

CORPORATION. Within the Meaning of the Revenue Act of 1918. The term "corporation" includes associations, joint-stock companies, and insurance companies. 269 U. S. 111. This definition applies to the entire act. Id., 113; 265 U. S. 154. See ASSOCIATION; DOMESTIC; ENEMY; FOREIGN; PARTNERSHIP; RESIDENT; UNINCORPORATED ASSOCIATION.

Within the Meaning of the Michigan Compiled Laws, 1915, Section 9071. The term "corporations" as used in this act construed to include all associations, partnership associations, and joint stock companies having any of the powers or privileges of corporations, not possessed by individuals or partnerships, under whatever term or designation they may be defined and known in the state where organized. 277 U. S. 544.

Within the Meaning of the Coal-Land Entry Provisions of Sections 2347-2352, Revised Statutes. An association of persons. 225 U. S. 225; 137 U. S. 160.

CORPORATION ACT. Act 13, Car. II. c. 1, 12, by which it was provided that no person should thereafter be elected to office in any corporate town who should not within one year previously have taken the sacrament of the Lord's Supper according to the rites of the Church of England. 4 Bl. Com. 58. Since repealed. R. & L.

CORPORE ET ANIMO (L. Lat.). By the body and by the mind; by the physical act and by the mental intent. Dig. 41, 2, 3. Burrill.

CORPS DIPLOMATIQUE. The body of ambassadors and diplomatic persons. Wharton; R. & L.

COSDUNA. A custom or tribute. English.

COSEN. In Old English Law. To cheat. 3 Leon. 171. Burrill.

COSENGAGE. See COSINAGE.

COSMUS. Clean. Blount; R. & L.

COSTS. The attorney's fees which are directed by section 7811, Nebraska Comp. Stats., 1922, to be allowed and "taxed as part of the costs," in actions on guaranty and other specified insurance contracts, are not costs in the ordinary sense and are not taxable as costs under Rev. Stats. sections 823, 824, in actions in federal courts, but are to be allowed in those courts by inclusion in their judgments. 276 U. S. 242.

COSTUMBRE. In Spanish Law. Custom; an unwritten law established by usage, during a long space of time. Las Partidas, Part I, tit. 2, l. 4. Burrill.

CO-SURETIES. Joint sureties; two or more sureties to the same obligation. R. & L.

COTA. A cot or hut. Blount; R. & L.

COTAGIUM or COTTAGIUM. A small house or cottage. Spelman; R. & L.

COTARIUS. A cottager who held in free socage and paid a stated firm or rent in provisions or money, with some occasional personal services. R. & L.

COTERIE. A fashionable association, or a knot of persons forming a particular circle. The origin of term is purely commercial, signifying an association in which each member furnished his part and bore his share in the profits and losses. Wharton; R. & L.

COTES WOLD. A place where is no wood. Sheep-cotes, a place where sheep feed on hills. English.

COTSETHLA. The cottage belonging to a small farm. English.

COTSETHLAND, COTLAND. Land held by a cottager whether by socage or villein tenure. English.

COTUCA. Coat armor. R. & L.

COTUCHANS. Boors; husbandmen. Domesday Book. R. & L.

COUCHER or COURCHER. A factor who continues abroad for traffic (37 Edw. III, c. 16); also the general book wherein any corporations, etc., register their acts. 3 & 4 Edw. VI, c. 10. R. & L.

COUNCIL OF CONCILIATION. By Act 30 & 31 Vict. c. 105. Power given crown to grant licenses for formation of councils of conciliation and arbitration, consisting of a certain number of masters and workmen in any trade or employment, having power to hear and determine all questions between masters and workmen, which may be submitted to them by both parties, arising out of or respect to the particular trade or manufacture and incapable of being otherwise settled. Have power to apply to a justice to enforce their award. Members elected by persons engaged in the trade. Dav. B. Soc. 232. R. & L.

COUNCIL OF JUDGES. Under English Judicature Act, 1873, an annual council of the judges of the supreme court is to be held for the purpose of considering the operation of the new practice, offices, etc., introduced by the act and of reporting to a secretary of state, as to any alterations which they consider should be made in the law for the administration of justice. Only meeting hitherto in November, 1880. R. & L.

COUNCIL OF THE NORTH. A court instituted by Henry VIII., in 1537, to administer justice in Yorkshire and the four other northern counties. Abolished by 16 Car. I. Brown; R. & L.

COUNSEL'S SIGNATURE. Required in some jurisdictions to be fixed to pleadings; for satisfying the court that they were interposed in good faith and on legal grounds. Abbott.

COUNTEE. See COUNT.

COUNTENANCE. In Old English Law. Credit; estimation. Wharton; R. & L.

COUNTER-FESANCE. See COUNTERFEIT.

COUNTER-ROLLS. The rolls which sheriffs have with the coroners, containing particulars of their proceedings, as well of appeals as of inquests, etc. 3 Edw. I. c. 10; Termes de la Ley. R. & L.

COUNTRY. See FOREIGN COUNTRY (Supp.).

COUNTY. See CITY (Supp.).

COURT HAND. The style of handwriting in which records were recorded in England from an early period. English.

COURT OF APPEALS IN CASES OF CAPTURE. A court created by congress under the articles of confederation, before the adoption of the United States constitution, having appellate jurisdiction in prize cases. 1 Dall. 95; 2 id. 19, 160; 5 Cranch (U. S.) 115. R. & L.

COURT OF COMMON PLEAS FOR THE CITY AND COUNTY OF NEW YORK. Oldest court in state of New York. Jurisdiction unlimited as to amount but restricted to the city and county of New York, as respects locality. Has appellate jurisdiction of cases tried in the Marine Court and district courts of New York City. 1 E. D. Smith (N. Y.) 17. R. & L.

COURT OF ERRORS AND APPEALS. The court of last resort in the state of New Jersey. Formerly the ultimate court of appeal in New York was so called. R. & L.

COURT OF GENERAL SESSIONS. A court of jurisdiction, chiefly criminal, in some states. New York court is held only in county of New York, by a single judge (either the recorder, city judge, or judge of General Sessions), and often two terms or branches of the court are held at the same time. Original jurisdiction extends to all offences, capital or otherwise (but subject in some cases to removal for trial into the Oyer and Terminer), and it also hears appeals from the Court of Special Sessions.

COURT OF GUESTLING. See COURT OF CINQUE PORTS.

COURT OF HONOR. See COURT OF CHIVALRY.

COURT OF HUSTINGS. In city of London, analogous to the sheriff's county court. 3 Steph. Com. 293. Formerly had jurisdiction in causes of action arising within its district, namely, the city. R. & L.

COURT OF LAW. One having jurisdiction of actions and suits at law, as distinguished from a court of equity. See COURT OF EQUITY.

COURT OF LODEMANAGE. See COURT OF CINQUE PORTS; CINQUE PORTS.

COURT OF PLEAS. In county palatine of Durham, having a local common law jurisdiction. Abolished by Judicature Act, jurisdiction transferred to the High Court. Jud. Act, 1873, §16; 3 Bl. Com. 79. R. & L.

COURTS. See GOVERNMENTAL POWER (Supp.).

COURTS, UNIVERSITY. In Oxford and Cambridge, England, having jurisdiction of personal actions arising within the university; also criminal courts with jurisdiction over offences committed within the same universities. Established by Henry III. English.

COURTS OF PRINCIPALITY OF WALES. Species of private courts established in Wales by Henry VIII; abolished by 1 Will. IV, c. 70. Now divided into two circuits visited by judges, as in England, to dispose of cases ready for trial.

COURTS OF WESTMINSTER HALL. Superior courts, law and equity, for centuries fixed at Westminster. Courts of equity nominally sit at Westminster, though actually in courts provided for the purpose in or in the neighborhood of Lincoln's Inn. R. & L.

COUVERTURE. In French Law. A deposit placed with a broker to indemnify the broker against possible loss in making purchases for his principal. English.

COVERT. Under cover, authority, protection; sheltered; a thicket where game is wont to hide; a flock of feathered animals, as quails, etc. English. Co. Litt. 47b; 3 Bl. Com. 12.

CREDIT. See EXCESS-PROFITS CREDIT (Supp.).

CREDITORS. Within the Meaning of Section 524 of the Code of Virginia, providing that all property used in his business by a person trading in his own name shall, as to his creditors, be liable for his debts. "The creditors" means creditors having a lien. 276 U. S. 12.

CREDITRIX. A female creditor. English.

CREOSOTING-IN-TRANSIT. A privilege by which forest products received for shipment may be stopped and unloaded at an intermediate point, there subjected to the process of creosoting, and later forwarded on the original bill-of-lading to the destination therein named. Where the privilege is granted and availed of, delivery is made of the commodity to the creosoting plant, as if that were the final destination. It is there unloaded and treated; and at some time thereafter it is re-delivered to the carrier, as if it were an initial shipment of the creosoted product. Then it is forwarded to the final destination. Although some charge is made for the transit service, the shipper secures thereby a lower freight rate. For through rates are generally much less than the rate on the untreated forest product from point of origin to the transit point plus that on the treated product from there to destination. 257 U. S. 254, 255.

CREPARE OCULUM. To put out an eye. An offence punishable among the Saxons by a fine of fifty shillings. Wharton; R. & L.

CREST. In heraldry, crest signifies the device set over a coat-of-arms. R. & L.

CRETINUS. A sudden stream or torrent; an inundation. Cowell; R. & L.

CRUE LA PEEZ (L. Fr.). Rehearse the concord or peace. Used in ancient proceedings for levying fines. Parties appeared before justice to read aloud the agreement between the parties, as to the lands intended to be conveyed. 2 Reeves Hist. Eng. Law, 224, 225. Burrill.

CRIME. See CRIMINAL CONTEMPT (Supp.).

CRIME OF CONSPIRACY. See CONSPIRACY, CRIME OF (Supp.).

CRIMINAL ANARCHY. Within the Meaning of Section 160, Fourteenth Amendment. The doctrine that organized government should be overthrown by force or violence or by assassination of the executive head or of any of the executive officials of government, or by any unlawful means. The advocacy of such doctrine either by word of mouth or writing is a felony. 268 U. S. 654.

CRIMINAL CONTEMPT. The proceeding for criminal contempt, unlike that for civil contempt, is between the public and the defendant, is an independent proceeding at law, and no part of the original cause. 266 U. S. 64; 221 U. S. 444-446, 451.

Within the Meaning of the Clayton Act. The act or thing charged must be of such character as also to constitute a crime. Prosecuting must be in conformity with the practice in criminal cases. Upon conviction the accused is to be punished by fine or imprisonment, or both. The dominating purpose of the proceeding is punitive to vindicate the authority of the court and punish the act of disobedience as a public wrong. Id., 65; 223 U. S. 641; 194 U. S. 461; 187 Fed. 401; 190 Fed. 572.

If the contempt savors of criminality, and the sentence is penal, that according to the books appears to be enough. Id.; 2 Russ. & M. 667.

That the power to punish for contempts is inherent in all courts has been many times decided and may be regarded as settled law. It is essential to the administration of justice. The courts of the United States, when called into existence and vested with jurisdiction over any subject, at once become possessed of the power. So far as the inferior federal courts are concerned, however, it is not beyond the authority of congress (19 Wall. 510-511; 194 U. S. 326); but the attributes which inhere in that power and are inseparable from it can neither be abrogated nor rendered practically inoperative. That it may be regulated within limits not precisely defined may not be doubted. Id., 66. See PARDON, POWER OF; OFFENCES AGAINST THE UNITED STATES.

In criminal contempt, as in criminal cases, the presumption of innocence obtains. Proof of guilt must be beyond reasonable doubt and the defendant may not be compelled to be a witness against himself. Id., 221 U. S. 444. The fundamental characteristics of both are the same. "So truly are they crimes that it seems to be proved that in the early law they were punished only by the usual criminal procedure, id., 3 Transactions of the Royal Historical Society, N. S. p. 147 (1885), and that at least in England it seems that they still may be and preferably are tried in that way." 233 U. S. 610, 611. This is also pointed out by counsel in the case of O'Shea vs. O'Shea and Parnell, L. R. 15 Prob. Div. 61; and in the course of one of the opinions in that case it is said (p. 64): "The offence of the appellant (criminal contempt) is certainly a criminal offence. I do not say that it is an indictable offence, but, whether indictable or not, it is a criminal offence, and it is an offence, and the only offence that I know of, which is punishable at common law by summary process." The proceeding is not between the parties to the original suit but between the public and the defendant. The only substantial difference between such a proceeding and a criminal prosecution by indictment or information is that in the latter the act complained of is the violation of a law and in the former the violation of a decree. In the case of the latter, the accused has a constitutional right of trial by jury; while in the former he has not. Id., 67.

CRIMINAL OFFENCE. See CRIMINAL CONTEMPT (Supp.).

CRIMINATE. See ACCUSARE NEMO SE DEBIT (Supp.).

CRO. A Scotch weregild. English.

CROCARDS. A sort of old base money. 4 Bl. Com. 98. R. & L.

CROCIA. A pastoral staff carried by bishops as an ensign of their office; the disposal of a bishopric or abbey. English.

CROCIARUS. The crossbearer. English.

CROISES (L. Fr.). Pilgrims; so called as wearing sign of the cross on their upper garments. Britt. c. 122. The Knights of the Order of St. John of Jerusalem, created for the defence of the pilgrims. Burrill.

CROITEIR. A crofter; one holding a croft. R. & L.

CROPS. Crops depend on the kind and condition of the soil, the vitality of seeds sown or plants set out, the cultivation and care given, the weather and many other things, as well as the kind and amount of the fertilizer applied. 264 U. S. 181. The amount or quality of the yield cannot be known in advance. When good results are not obtained, it is impossible to discover the causes and determine how much of the shortage, whether of quantity or kind, properly may be attributed to any particular thing. Id.

CROWNER. In Scotch Law. A coroner. English.

CROY. Marsh land. Blount; R. & L.

CRUCE SIGNATI. See CROISES (Supp.).

CRYPTA. A chapel or oratory under ground, or under a church or cathedral. Du Cange; R. & L.

CUEILLETTE. See A CUEILLETTE (Supp.).

CULPABILIS (Lat.). In Old English Law. Guilty. Fleta, lib. 4, c. 30, ¶11. Burrill.

CULRACH. In Scotch Law. A pledge given in repaying a man from one court to another. English.

CURA (Lat.). Care; charge; oversight. In Civil Law. A species of guardianship commenced at puberty and continued until completion of the twenty-fifth year. Inst. 1, 23. Pr.; Id. 1, 25, Pr. Burrill.

CURAGULUS. One who takes care of a thing. English.

CURATIVE. Intended to cure a defect. English.

CURE. A "cure" is the successful completion of the chemical union or vulcanization of rubber with sulphur. (See VULCANIZATION OF RUBBER.) The fact of a successful "cure" for practical purposes is established by a simple and short method called the thumb and tooth test. By this test, rubber chemists settle the fact and determine by the resulting product the satisfactory quality of the stock or the mix for vulcanization, and they become expert at it. If by this test the product is not well united chemically, it is said to be "under cured" or "over cured," and then the operator changes the ingredients or the time of the process. When it is important to determine with greater exactness the tensile strength and degree of elasticity or other qualities of the product, a special machine measure or test is used, but the thumb and tooth test is the frequently used way of knowing a cure and it is a satisfactory one for every-day use in business. 276 U. S. 367.

It has been long known that a "cure" can be hastened by mixing with the ingredients a small quantity of what is called an accelerator or vitalizer. Inorganic substances like lime or litharge were originally employed as such, but it was subsequently found that certain organic substances were more powerful or more "active," as the term is, and they came into more general use. The heat to which the rubber mixed with sulphur is subjected has a deleterious effect upon the substance of the raw rubber, and the longer the heating, the greater the injury. An accelerator, as it lessens the time of the cure, not only increases the output of the equipment used but reduces the danger of deterioration of the product. An accelerator thus improves the elasticity, tensile strength, and other desirable commercial qualities of the finished product. It is not fully understood what the vitalizing or catalytic action of the accelerator is, but its existence and its results have long been known. Id., 368.

S. 520.

CURRENT EARNINGS. See UNDIVIDED PROFITS (Supp.).

CURRENT RATE OF WAGES. Within the Meaning of Oklahoma Comp. Stats. 1921, Sections 7285, 7287, imposing punishments upon contractors with the state who pay their workmen less than the "current of per diem wages in the locality where the work is performed," The words

"current rate of wages" do not denote a specific or definite sum, but minimum, maximum, and intermediate amounts indeterminate, varying from time to time and dependent upon the class and kind of work done, the efficiency of the workmen, etc. The statutory phrase reasonably cannot be confined to any of these amounts, since it imports each and all of them. The "current rate of wages" is not simple but progressive—from so much (the minimum) to so much (the maximum), including all between; and to direct the payment of an amount which shall not be less than one of several different amounts, without saying which, is to leave the question of what is meant incapable of any definite answer. 269 U. S. 393, 394; 166 N. Y. 24, 25. To construe the phrase "current rate of wages" as meaning either the lowest rate or the highest rate of any intermediate rate or, if it were possible to determine the various factors to be considered, an average of all rates, would be as likely to defeat the purpose of the legislature as to promote it. Id., 394; 91 N. C. 553; 3 Watts & S. 177. See LOCALITY.

DATA. The date; the day when given; the date of a writ, called in modern practice the teste; the time when it was issued; the date when a grant, deed, charter, etc., was executed. Things granted, admitted; grounds of inference. English.

DATE CERTAINE. In French Law. A deed has a date certaine (fixed date) when registered. English.

DATE OF ALLOWANCE. Within the Meaning of Section 1324 (a) of the Revenue Act of November 23, 1921, providing for the payment of interest upon the allowance of a claim for refund, "to the date of such allowance" does not mean to the date of actual repayment, nor to the date of the first decision of the commissioner that an overassessment has been made and that a refund should be granted. "Allowance," in its ordinary sense, does not mean payment, and in the practical administration of the Treasury Department the two things are quite different. The one is a decision by the competent authority that the payment should be made. The other is the actual payment. Therefore, the words "to the date of such allowance" do not carry interest to be paid on refunds down to the time of payment.

The real date of allowance is not that of the original decision of the commissioner that there has been an overassessment, but the date when, after investigation by the collector of internal revenue and the assistant commissioner, the matter is finally made effective by the approval of the commissioner. Until it reaches him and is approved by him, the refund can not be paid. This is the real date of allowance. 270 U. S. 168-171.

DEFICIENCY. Within the Meaning the Revenue Act of 1924, Section 273. (1) The amount by which the tax imposed exceeds the amount shown as the tax by the taxpayer upon his return; (2) if no amount is shown as the tax by the taxpayer on his return, it is then the amount by which the tax exceeds the amounts previously assessed as a deficiency. 273 U. S. 225.

DEFINED DISTRICT. Within the Meaning of the Texas Constitution (Art. III, Section 52). A defined area in a county, and less than a county, other than a political subdivision of a county. 269 U. S. 404; 219 S. W. 557.

DEFINITIO. See DEFINITION.

DEFORCIATIO. A distress; a holding of goods for the satisfaction of a debt. R. & L.

DEFRAUDATION. Privation by fraud. See DEFRAUD.

DEFRAUDING. Within the Meaning of Section 35 of the Penal Code, as Amended by the Act of October 23, 1918. The wrongful obtaining of possession of non-dutiable merchandise from a collector is not a "defrauding" of the government within the meaning of the statute. Section 35 has no words extending the meaning of the word "defrauding" beyond its usual and primary sense. On the contrary, it is used in connection with the words "cheating or swindling," indicating that it is to be construed in the manner in which those words are ordinarily used, as relating to the fraudulent causing of pecuniary or property loss. And this meaning is emphasized by other provisions of the section in which the word "defraud" is used in reference to the obtaining of money or other property from the government by false claims, vouchers, and the like; and by the context of the entire section, which deals with the wrongful obtaining of money and other property of the government, with no reference to the impairment or obstruction of its governmental functions. 270 U. S. 346. See SCHEME.

It has been contended that, by analogy to the decisions in 216 U. S. 479, and 265 U. S. 188, and other cases involving the construction of section 37 of the penal code relating to conspiracies to defraud the United States, the word "defrauding" in the present statute should be construed as being used not merely in its primary sense of cheating the government out of property or money, but also in the secondary sense of interfering with or obstructing one of its lawful governmental functions by deceitful and fraudulent means. The language of the two statutes is, however, so essentially different as to destroy the weight of the supposed analogy. 270 U. S. 346.

DEGENERATION. A chemical treatment in which changes in the arrangement of the atoms in starch molecules are effected by use of a catalytic agent, by which treatment the viscosity or the water absorptive quality of starches may be reduced. 277 U. S. 248. See ANIMAL GLUE (Supp.).

DINARCHY. A government of two persons. R. & L.

DINERO. In Spanish Law. Money. English.

DIOICHA. The district over which a bishop exercised his spiritual functions. R. & L.

DIPTYCHA. Tablets used by the Romans for writing purposes. They were made of metal, wood, and other substances and folded like a book of two leaves. English.

DIRIBITORES. In Roman Law. Persons who distributed ballots to the voters. English.

DISABLE. To take advantage of one's own or another's disability. 4 Co. 123b. See DISABILITY.

DISADVOCARE. To deny a thing. R. & L.

DISAGREEMENT. A failure to agree; the refusal to accept an estate, lease, pardon, legacy, etc. Without the express agreement the law presumes acceptance. English. Co. Litt. 2b, 3a, 380; 3 Prest. Abst. 104; 2 Bl. Com. 292.

DISALT. To disable a person. R. & L.

DISAPPROPRIATION. Where the appropriation of a benefice is severed, either by the patron presenting a clerk, or by the corporation which has the appropriation being dissolved. 1 Bl. Com. 385. R. & L. See APPROPRIATION.

DISBOSCATIO. A turning wooded ground into arable or pasture. Cowell; R. & L.

DISCARCARE. Discharging or unloading a ship. English.

DISCLAMATION. In Scotch Law. Denial that land is held of another. English.

DISCOMMON. To change from a common to private or reserved land; to deprive of the privilege of using a common. In English universities, to deprive a tradesman of the privilege of trading with the students. English.

DISCONVENABLE. Not convenient; not proper or fit. English.

DISCOVERY, BILL OF. A bill of discovery cannot be used merely for the purpose of enabling the plaintiff in such a bill to pry into the case of his adversary to learn its strength or weakness. A discovery sought upon suspicion, surmise, or vague guesses is called a "fishing bill," and will be dismissed. 221 U. S. 540, quoting Story, Eq. P. sections 320 to 325. A bill of discovery must seek only evidence which is material to the support of the complainant's own case, and prying into the nature of his adversary's case will not be tolerated. The principle is stated by an authority upon equity thus: "Nor has a party a right to any discovery except of fact and deeds and writings necessary to his own title under which he claims; for he is not at liberty to pry into the title of the adverse party." Id., quoting Story, Eq. Juris. section 1490; 7 Ch. App. Cas. 694. "The province of discovery in equity is not to compel a defendant, who is a plaintiff in a suit at law, to disclose in what manner he intends to make out his case at law. The plaintiff in equity is entitled only to the discovery of such matters in the knowledge, or possession, of the defendant in equity as will enable him to make out his own case at law; and exceptions to an answer, omitting to respond to inquiries touching the mode in which the defendant purposed to make out his case at law, and as to documents relating to matters in the bill mentioned, were overruled." Id., quoting 33 Beav. 31. This fundamental rule implies that production of an adversary's documents should not be required before trial, that one party may examine and inspect in search of evidence which he may or may not use in the trial. Id., 540, 541.

DISCRETION. In rules of the United States Board of Tax Appeals prescribing for admission of attorneys and certified accountants, the provision "the Board may in its discretion deny admission, suspend or disbar any person" must be construed to mean the exercise of a discretion to be exercised after fair investigation, with such a notice, hearing, and opportunity to answer for the applicant as would constitute due process. 270 U. S. 123; 32 App. D. C. 153, 158; 12 App. D. C. 485; 27 App. D. C. 46, 51.

The term "discretion" implies the absence of a hard-and-fast rule. The establishment of a clearly defined rule of action would be the end of "discretion," and yet discretion should not be a word for arbitrary will or inconsiderate action. "Discretion means a decision of what is just and proper in the circumstances." Bouvier's Law Dictionary. "Discretion means the liberty or power of acting without other control than one's own judgment." Webster's Dict. 186 U. S. 9.

See MANDAMUS (Supp.).

DISGAVEL. In English Law. To deprive lands of that principal quality of gavelkind tenure by which they descend equally among all the sons of the tenant. 2 Bl. Com. 85. Burrill. See GAVELKIND.

DISGRADING. The act of degrading or depriving of an order or dignity, temporal or spiritual. Termes de la Ley. R. & L.

DISPARAGACION. An unequal alliance or unsuitable connection in marriage; the matching an heir or ward in marriage, under his or her degree or condition, or against the rules of decency. English.

DISPARAGARE. To connect unequally; to match unsuitably. English.

DISPARAGATION. See DISPARAGACION (Supp.).

DISPARK. To throw open a park. R. & L.

DISPATCH or DESPATCH. (1) A message, letter, or order sent with speed on affairs of state; (2) a telegraphic message. R. & L.

DISPERSONARE. To scandalize or disparage. Blount; R. & L.

DISPONO. To dispose of, grant, convey; to arrange or set in order; to direct or regulate. English.

DISPOSING MIND. The capacity to dispose of property by will, testament, or devise. English.

DISPOSSESS CASE, PROCEEDING or WARRANT. Signifies proceedings taken when a landlord invokes a statutory remedy, such as known in New York as summary proceedings to obtain possession of real property against a tenant who holds over or makes default in payment of rent. Abbott.

DISPROVE. To refute; to show to be illegal. English.

DISPUNISHABLE. In Old English Law. Not answerable. Co. Litt. 27b, 53. Burrill.

DISRATE. To lower in rate or rank. English.

DISSEISITRIX. A female disseisor (q. v.). English.

DISSIGNARE. To break open a seal. R. & L.

DISSOLUTION OF PARLIAMENT. May be dissolved by the crown either by proclamation or in person; usually former after prorogation. No parliament may last longer than seven years. Brown; R. & L.

DISSOLVE. To put an end to, cancel, abrogate, annul; applied to an injunction in chancery, as discharge is to a rule nisi in common law. If an injunction has been obtained by a misrepresentation of facts it will be dissolved, although on the merits it is called for. R. & L.

DISSUADE. To influence a person not to do a certain act. The term is used in the criminal law with reference to inducing a witness not to give evidence against an indicted person. R. & L.

DISTILLED SPIRITS. Within the Meaning of Rev. Stats., Section 3248. That substance known as ethyl alcohol, hydrated oxide of ethyl, or spirit of wine, which is commonly produced by the fermentation of grain, starch, molasses, or sugar, including all dilutions and mixtures of this substance. 228 U. S. 443, 444.

DISTINCTE ET APERTE. Distinctly and openly. Words used in old writs of error, stating how return shall be made. English.

DISTINCTIVE NAME. Within the Meaning of Departmental Regulation 20, Section 8. A distinctive name is a trade, arbitrary, or fancy name which clearly distinguishes a food product, mixture, or compound from any other food product, mixture, or compound. 241 U. S. 286.

A distinctive name is a name that distinguishes. It may be a name in common use as a generic name, e. g., coffee, flour, etc. Where there is a trade description of this sort by which a product of a given kind is distinctively known to the public, it matters not that the name had originally a different significance. Thus, soda-water is a familiar trade description of an article which now, as is well known, rarely contains soda in any form. Id., 286, 287.

DISTINGUISH. To point out an essential difference; to prove a case, cited as applicable, to be inapplicable. R. & L.

DISTRAINER or DISTRAINOR. He who seizes a distress. R. & L.

DISTRAINT. Seizure. R. & L.

DISTRINGO. To draw asunder; to stretch out; to detain a person anywhere, to hinder; to occupy; to engage; to distract, to coerce; to compel; to bind fast or strain hard. English.

DISTURBER. If a bishop refuse or neglect to examine or admit a patron's clerk, without reason assigned or notice given, he is styled a disturber by the law, and shall not have any title to present by lapse; for no man shall take advantage of his own wrong. 2 Bl. Com. 278. R. & L.

DITES OUSTER. Say over; the form of awarding a respondeas ouster. English.

DIVERS. Several; sundry; various. English.

DIVERSITIES DES COURTS. Diversity of the Courts. A treatise on the courts and their jurisdiction, written in French and printed in 1525 and again in 1534. Author unknown, thought to be Fitzherbert. English.

DIVERSORIUM. In Old English Law. A lodging or inn. Towne. Pl. 38. Burrill.

DIVERT. To turn aside; to turn out of the way; to alter the course of things; usually applied to watercourses, sometimes to roads. 8 East. 394. Burrill.

DIVES (Lat.). A rich man. In practice of the English Chancery Division, "dives costs" are costs on the ordinary scale as opposed to costs formerly allowed to a successful pauper suing or defending in forma pauperis and which consisted only of his costs out of pocket. Dan. Ch. Pr. 43; Cons. Ord. XL, 5. R. & L.

DIVESTITIVE FACT. A fact which brings about the termination of a right. English.

DIVIDED INTO WATCHES. Within the Meaning of Section 2 of the Seamen's Act of March 4, 1915. In the understanding of the sailor, a division into watches, as applied to the personnel of the ship, connotes a division as nearly equal as possible. 269 U. S. 371. See WATCH (Supp.).

DIVIDENDA. In Old Records. An indenture; one part of an indenture. R. & L.

DIVIDENDS. The recurrent return upon stock paid to stockholders by a going corporation in the ordinary course of business, which does not reduce their stock holdings and leaves them in a position to enjoy future returns upon the same stock. 276 U. S. 237; 247 U. S. 344-346.

Within the Meaning of the Revenue Act of 1918, Sections 201 (a) and 201 (c). The general definition of a "dividend" in section 201 (a)—"any distribution made by a corporation . . . to its shareholders . . . whether in cash or in other property . . . out of its earnings or profits accumulated since February 28, 1913"—was not intended to apply to distributions made to stockholders in the liquidation of a corporation, but was intended that such distributions should be governed by section 201 (c), which, dealing specifically with such liquidation, provided that the amounts distributed should "be treated as payments in exchange for stock" and that any gain realized thereby should be taxed to the stockholders "as other gains or profits." Id.

DIVISIM (L. Lat.). In Old English Law. Severally; separately. Bract. fol. 47. Burrill.

DIVISION. See COURT OF APPEAL.

DIVISIONAL COURTS. Courts in England consisting of two or (in special cases) more judges of the High Court of Justice, sitting to transact certain kinds of business which cannot be disposed of by one judge. R. & L.

In the Civil Law. Words used by the praetor to express the execution of his civil jurisdiction. English.

DO, LEGO. I give, I bequeath; or I give and bequeath. Formal words in making a bequest or legacy. English.

DOCK. v. To decrease; to rescind; as dock an account, to deduct from an account; dock an entail, to destroy, cut off, or bar an entail. English.

Dock. n. See DOCK.

DOCKAGE. Consists of separable foreign material, such as dirt, pieces of straw, chaff, weed stems, weed seeds, and grain other than wheat. Its proportion varies in different lots, but generally is less than five per cent. When not separated it causes the grain to bring a lower price per bushel than clean wheat would bring. When separated it has a value for poultry and stock feed which usually is in excess of the cost of separation. Occasionally the farmer separates it at the farm and sells only the clean wheat, and occasionally the buyer separates it at the country elevator, charges the farmer for that service, and buys and ships only the clean wheat; but generally the grain is sold by the farmer and shipped by the country buyer with the dockage included. 268 U. S. 193.

"The foreign material in wheat may seriously affect its value, in that it often increases the cost of milling and causes injury to the baking qualities of flour. Therefore, that factor is considered in the inspecting and grading of wheat. The amount of dockage present has a bearing upon the commercial value of a lot of wheat. Especially when present in large amounts, it is a factor of considerable importance to the parties interested in the marketing or storage of grain." Id., quoting Farmer's Bulletin No. 1118, United States Department of Agriculture, pp. 5, 21. See GRADING; WHEAT (Supp.).

DOCTOR AND STUDENT. A dialogue in book form in which the principles of common law are discussed. It was written by St. Germain during the reign of Henry VIII. English.

DOCTRINE. A principle; precept; tenet; a particular view of a subject; that which is set forth for acceptance. English.

EQUAL PROTECTION CLAUSE. The equal protection clause of the fourteenth amendment means that the rights of all persons must rest upon the same rule under similar circumstances. It applies to the exercise of all the powers of the state which can affect the individual or his property, including the power of taxation. 277 U. S. 37. See EQUAL PROTECTION OF THE LAWS (Supp.).

EQUAL PROTECTION OF THE LAWS. The equality clause of the fourteenth amendment forbids any state to deny to any person the equal protection of the laws. The clause is associated in the amendment with the due process clause, and it is customary to consider them together. It may be that they overlap, that a violation of one may involve at times the violation of the other, but the spheres of the protection they offer are not coterminous. The due process clause requires that every man shall have the protection of his day in court, and the benefit of the general law, a law which hears before it condemns, which proceeds not arbitrarily or capriciously but upon inquiry, and renders judgment only after trial, so that every citizen shall hold his life, liberty, property, and immunities under the protection of the general rules which govern society. (110 U. S. 535.) It, of course, tends to secure equality of law in the sense that it makes a required minimum of protection for every one's right of life, liberty, and property, which the congress or the legislature may not withhold. Our whole system of law is predicated on the general, fundamental principle of equality of application of the law. "All men are equal before the law," "This is a government of laws and not of men," "No man is above the law," are all maxims showing the spirit in which legislatures, executives, and courts are expected to make, execute, and apply laws. The framers and adopters of this amendment embodied that spirit in a specific guaranty.

The guaranty was aimed at undue favor and individual or class privilege, on the one hand, and at hostile discrimination or the oppression of inequality, on the other. It sought an equality of treatment of all persons, even though all enjoyed the protection of due process. Mr. Justice Field said of the equality clause in 113 U. S. 32: "Class legislation, discriminating against some and favoring others, is prohibited, but legislation which, in carrying out a public purpose, is limited in its application, if within the sphere of its operation it affects alike all persons similarly situated, is not within the amendment." In 120 U. S. 68, the same justice said that the fourteenth amendment "does not prohibit legislation which is limited either in the objects to which it is directed, or by the territory within which it is to operate. It merely requires that all persons subjected to such legislation shall be treated alike, under like circumstances and conditions, both in the privileges conferred and in the liabilities imposed." Thus the guaranty was intended to secure equality of protection not only for all but against all similarly situated. Indeed, protection is not protection unless it does so. Immunity granted to a class, however limited, having the effect to deprive another class, however limited, of a personal or property right, is just as clearly a denial of equal protection of the laws to the latter class as if the immunity were in favor of, or the deprivation of right permitted worked against, a larger class.

Mr. Justice Matthews, in 118 U. S. 369, speaking of both the due process and the equality clause of the fourteenth amendment, said: "These provisions are universal in their application, to all persons within the territorial jurisdiction, without regard to any differences of race, of color, or of nationality; and the equal protection of the laws is a pledge of the protection of equal laws."

The accuracy and comprehensive felicity of this description of the effect of the equality clause are shown by the frequency with which it has been quoted in the decisions of the United States Supreme Court. It emphasizes the additional guaranty of a right which the clause has conferred beyond the requirement of due process. 257 U. S. 331-333. See 169 U. S. 466.

The fourteenth amendment intended "not only that there should be no arbitrary deprivation of life or liberty, or arbitrary spoliation of property, but that equal protection and security should be given to all under like circumstances in the enjoyment of their personal and civil rights; that all persons should be equally entitled to pursue their happiness and acquire and enjoy property; that they should have like access to the courts of the country for the protection of their persons and property, the prevention and redress of wrongs, and the enforcement of contracts; that no impediment should be interposed to the pursuits of any one except as applied to the same pursuits by others under like circumstances; that no greater burdens should be laid upon one than are laid upon others in the same calling and condition, and that in the administration of criminal justice no different or higher punishment should be imposed upon one than such as is prescribed to all for like offences." Id., quoting 113 U. S. 27.

"It (i. e., the equality clause) has respect to persons and classes of persons. It means that no person or class of persons shall be denied the same protection of the laws which is enjoyed by other persons or other classes in the same place and under like circumstances." Id., 336, quoting 101 U. S. 22. See CLASSIFICATION; EQUAL PROTECTION CLAUSE (Supp.).

EQUALITY CLAUSE OF THE FOURTEENTH AMENDMENT. See EQUAL PROTECTION OF THE LAWS; EQUAL PROTECTION CLAUSE (Supp.).

S. 393, quoting 165 U. S. 664; 211 U. S. 368; 105 U. S. 405; Pomeroy's Equity Jurisprudence (4th ed.) sections 1233, 1234, 1235.

An equitable lien reserved by the United States as security for the proper use or return of funds advanced to a contractor, which under the agreement were deposited in special bank accounts for the purpose of providing such security, held superior to the right of the banks (they having notice of the agreement), to set off such deposits against debts owed them by the contractor. Id., 394.

ERGO. Proceeding from, in consequence of; on account, because of; consequently, accordingly, therefore, then. English.

ERIACH. In the Irish Breton Law. Recompense for murder. Spencer's Ireland. R. & L. See WERE.

ERMINE. At one time the state robe of a judge; so called because lined with the white fur of the Armenian rat (mustela erminea). English.

ERNES. The loose scattered ears of corn that are left on the ground after the binding. Kenn. Gloss. R. & L.

ERRATICUM. A waif or stray. R. & L.

ERRATUM. See ERROR.

ERRONEOUSLY ALLOWED. Within the Meaning of the Coal-land Law, Rev. Stat., Sections 2347-2352. An expression which denotes some mistake or error on the part of the land officers whereby an entry is allowed when it should be disallowed. 225 U. S. 224. The expression does not denote some fraud or false pretense practiced on them whereby an applicant appears to be entitled to the allowance of an entry when in truth he is not. Of this expression it is said in the regulations of the Land Department adopted under section 4 of the act: "This cannot be given an interpretation of such latitude as would countenance fraud. If the records of the Land Office, or the proofs furnished, should show that the entry ought not to be permitted, and yet it were permitted, then it would be erroneously allowed. But if a tract of land were subject to entry, and the proofs showed a compliance with law, and the entry should be cancelled because the proofs were shown to be false, it could not be held that the entry was 'erroneously allowed'; and in such case repayment would not be authorized." Id.

ERRONICE. Erroneously; through mistake. English.

ERTHMIOTUM. A meeting of the neighborhood to compromise differences amongst themselves; a court held on the boundary of two lands. R. & L.

ESBRANCATURA. Cutting off branches or boughs in forests, etc. Hor. 784. R. & L.

ESCALDARE. To scald. It is said that to scald hogs was one of the ancient tenures in serjeanty. R. & L.

ESCAPIO QUIETUS. Delivered from that punishment which by the laws of the forest lay upon those whose beasts were found upon forbidden land. Jacob; R. & L.

ESCEPPA. A measure of corn. R. & L.

ESCOT. A tax anciently paid in boroughs and corporations toward the support of the community which was called "scot and lot." R. & L.

ESCRITURA. A term in the Spanish law, applied to a deed written by the public escribano, or under the seal of some authorized person. R. & L.

ESCROQUERIE. Fraud. English.

ESCROW. In Old English Law. An escrow; a scroll. Perk. ch. 1, s. 9; ch. 2, ss. 137, 138. Burrill.

ESCURARE. To scour or cleanse. Cowell; R. & L.

ESNE. A hiring, a serf. English.

ESPURIO. In Spanish Law. A bastard of unknown father. English.

ESSARTUM. Essart or assart (q. v.). Woodland turned into tillage by uprooting the trees and removing the underwood. English.

ESSENCE. The distinctive quality of a thing; that stipulation in an agreement without the performance of which the contract cannot be carried out. English.

EST ASCAVOIR (L. Fr.). It is understood or known; "it is to wit." Litt. Sect. 9, 45, 46, 57, 59. Burrill.

ESTABLISH RATES. The term does not convey the idea of permanency; nor should it be construed in some statutes to mean to fix unalterably. 232 U. S. 75; 178 U. S. 38. For example, rates established might be "established anew." Id.

ESTABLISHED PRICE. Within the Meaning of Paragraph 3 of Section 800 (a) of Revenue Act of 1918, laying taxes on theater and opera tickets sold at newsstands, hotels, etc., for more than the "established price." The court of claims held that the term "established price" did not imply a fixing of the price by the producing company or others having the general power of establishing the prices of tickets. 270 U. S. 249.

ESTACHE (Fr. estacher, to fasten). A bridge or stank of stone or timber. Cowell; R. & L.

ESTANQUES. Weirs or kiddles in rivers. R. & L.

ESTATE AD REMANENTIAM. Estate in fee simple. English.

ESTATE TAIL, QUASI. An estate granted by a tenant for life to a man and his heirs. It is so termed because a tenant for life cannot grant such an estate, as it is greater than he holds. English.

ESTENDARD, ESTENDART, or STANDARD. An ensign for horsemen in war. R. & L.

ESTOP. To stop; to prevent. See ESTOPPEL.

ESTOPPEL. In Patent Law. An assignor of a patent right is estopped to attack the utility, novelty, or validity of a patented invention which he has assigned or granted as against any one claiming the right under his assignment or grant. 266 U. S. 349; 3 Fed. 898. As to the rest of the world, the patent may have no efficacy and create no right of monopoly; but the assignor cannot be heard to question the right of his assignee to exclude him from its use. Id.; 20 Fed. 835; 58 Fed. 818; 60 Fed. 284; 63 Fed. 607; 99 Fed. 90, 91.

The analogy between estoppel in conveyances of land and estoppel in assignments of a patent right is clear. If one lawfully conveys to another a patented right to exclude the public from the making, using, and vending of an invention, fair dealing should prevent him from derogating from the title he has assigned, just as it estops a grantor of a deed of land from impeaching the effect of his solemn act as against his grantee. The grantor purports to convey the right to exclude others, in the one instance, from a defined tract of land, and in the other, from a described and limited field of the useful arts. The difference between the two cases is only the practical one of fixing exactly what is the subject matter conveyed. A tract of land is easily determined by survey. Not so the scope of a patent right for an invention. Id., 350.

As between the owner of a patent and the public, the scope of the right of exclusion granted is to be determined in the light of the state of the art at the time of the invention, which may be considered. Of course the state of the art cannot be used to destroy the patent and defeat the grant, because the assignor is estopped to do this. But the state of the art may be used to construe and narrow the claims of the patent, conceding their validity. The distinction may be a nice one but seems to be workable. Such evidence might not be permissible in a case in which the assignor made specific representations as to the scope of the claims and their construction, inconsistent with the state of the art, on the faith of which the assignee purchased; but that would be a special instance of estoppel by conduct. Id., 351.

"It seems to be well settled that the assignor of a patent is estopped from saying his patent is void for want of novelty or utility, or because anticipated by prior inventions. But this estoppel, for manifest reasons, does not prevent him from denying infringement. To determine such an issue, it is admissible to show the state of the art involved, that the court may see what the thing was which was assigned and thus determine the primary or secondary character of the patent assigned, and the extent to which the doctrine of equivalents may be invoked against an infringer. The court will not assume against an assignor, and in favor of his assignee, anything more than that the invention presented a sufficient degree of utility and novelty to justify the issuance of the patent assigned, and will apply to the patent the same rule of construction, with this limitation, which would be applicable between the patentee and a stranger." Id., quoting 99 Fed. 90, 91.

A state cannot estop itself by grant or contract from the exercise of the police power. 266 U. S. 427; 250 U. S. 244; 232 U. S. 558; 221 U. S. 414.

ESTRECIATUS. Straightened; as applied to roads. Cowell; R. & L.

ET. And; and indeed; and moreover; and that too; as; than; when and then; now; but; and in fact; and indeed, and truly; and so; and so too; and also; too; also; likewise. English.

ET ALII E CONTRA (L. Lat.). And others on the other side. A phrase constantly used in the Year Books, in describing a joinder in issue. P. 1 Edw. II. Burrill.

ET EI LEGITUR IN HAC VERBA. And it is read to him in these words. Formerly used in entering the prayer of oyer on record. Burrill.

EXCESS-PROFITS CREDIT. Within the Meaning of the Revenue Act, 1918, Title III, Section 312. "Excess-profits credit" of a domestic corporation should consist of a specific exemption of $3,000 plus an amount equal to 8 per centum of the invested capital for the taxable year. 275 U. S. 216. See INVESTED CAPITAL; SURPLUS; UNDIVIDED PROFITS (Supp.).

EXCLUSA. A sluice; a structure for carrying off water; the payment by a tenant for a sluice. English.

EXCLUSIVE. Appertaining to the subject alone; not including, admitting, or pertaining to any other or others; undivided; sole; as, an exclusive right or privilege; exclusive jurisdiction. 202 U. S. 471, quoting the Century Dictionary.

Within the Meaning of the Naturalization Act, Section 3, which declares that "exclusive jurisdiction to naturalize aliens as citizens" is conferred upon the federal and state courts there specified, and these do not include the circuit courts of appeals. The term "exclusive" was used in order to withdraw the jurisdiction which minor state courts, being courts of record, had exercised under the authority conferred by earlier naturalization statutes. 270 U. S. 579.

EXCLUSIVE RIGHT. See EXCLUSIVE (Supp.).

EXCOMMUNICATO RECIPIENDO OR RECAPENDO. See DE EXCOMMUNICATO RECAPENDO.

EXCULPATION, LETTERS OF. In the Scotch Law. A warrant granted at the suit of a prisoner for citing witnesses in his own defence. R. & L.

EXCUSS. To seize and detain by law. English.

EXEAT. Leave given a priest by his bishop to go beyond his diocese. English.

EXIST. To be; to have actual existence; to be in force. English.

EXIT. Issued; it goes forth; it has been issued; issuance of a writ. R. & L.

EXLEGATIUS. He who is prosecuted as an outlaw. R. & L.

EXPANDED METAL. Metal openwork, held together by uncut portions of the metal, and constructed by making cuts or slashes in metal and then opening them so as to form a series of meshes or latticework. In its simplest form sheet metal may be expanded by making a series of cuts or slits in the metal in such relation to each other as to break joints, so that the metal, when opened or stretched, will present an open-mesh appearance. It may be likened to the familiar woven wire openwork construction, except that the metal is held together by uncut portions thereof, uniting the strands, and the whole forms a solid piece. 214 U. S. 374.

EXPECT. See EXPECTANCY.

EXPEDIMENT. The whole of a person's goods and chattels, bag and baggage. R. & L.

EXPEDITATÆ ARBORES. Trees rooted up or cut down to the roots. Fleta, 1, 2, c. XLI. R. & L.

EXPEDITO. An expedition; an irregular sort of army. R. & L.

EXPEL. See EJECTION.

EXPENSIS MILITUM NON LEVANDIS, ETC. An ancient writ to prohibit the sheriff from levying any allowance for knights of the shire, upon those who held lands in ancient demesne. Reg. Orig. 261. R. & L.

EXPLORATION. In Mining Law. See MINES AND MINING.

EXPRESS COMPANY. As Distinguished from Carrier by Railroad. An express company has no railroad. It is served by many railroads, as it is served by water lines, by motor trucks, and by horses and wagons. Practically every express company has had routes over many separate railroad systems. However numerous the railroads used, all the routes are parts of a single express system. If an express company is a "carrier by railroad," the entire length of its railroad must be construed to mean the entire length of all the lines of the railroads within the United States over which it has routes. Such a construction would, if adopted, tend to give permanency to an existing monopoly although it failed to give adequate service. 265 U. S. 433, 434. See CARRIER BY RAILROAD (Supp.).

EXPRESS CONTRACTS. See CONTRACT (Supp.).

EXPROMITTERE. In the Civil Law. To undertake for another, with the view of becoming liable in his place. Calv. Lex. Burrill.

EXPUNGE. See CANCEL.

EXPURGATION. The act of purging or cleansing. R. & L.

EXROGARE. In Roman Law. To take something from an old law by a new law. Tayl. Civ. Law, 155. Burrill.

EXTEND. See EXTENT.

EXTENSION OF RAILROAD. Within the Meaning of Paragraph 18 of the Transportation Act, 1920. If the purpose and effect of the new trackage is to extend substantially the line of a carrier into new territory, the proposed trackage constitutes an extension of the railroad, although the line be short and although the character of the service contemplated be that commonly rendered to industries by means of spurs or industrial tracks. Being an extension, it cannot be built unless the federal commission issues its certificate that public necessity and convenience require its construction. 270 U. S. 278. See INDUSTRIAL TRACK; BRANCH (Supp.).

EXTENSORES. Extenders or appraisers. The name applied to certain officers appointed to appraise and divide or apportion land. English.

EXTENUATE. See EXTENUATION.

EXTERUS. A foreigner or alien; one born abroad. English.

EXTIRPATIONE. A judicial writ, either before or after judgment, that lay against a person who, when a verdict was found against him for land, etc., maliciously overthrew any house or extirpated any trees upon it. Reg. Jud. 13, 56. R. & L.

EXTRA HAZARDOUS. In Insurance. See INSURANCE.

EXTRA PAROCHIAL. Outside of any parish.

Extra Parochial Highways. See 25 & 26 Vict. c. 61, §32.

Extra Parochial Marriages. 23 & 24 Vict. c. 24.

Relief of Extra Parochial Poor. 5 & 6 Vict. c. 48, and 20 Vict. c. 19. R. & L.

EXTRACTA CURIAE. The issues or profits of holding a court, arising from the customary fees, etc. Paroch. Antiq. 572. R. & L.

EXTRAHURA. A term in old English law denoting an estray. R. & L. See ESTRAY.

EXTREME CRUELTY. See CRUELTY.

EXTRINSIC. External; not contained in; from outside sources.

In Scotch Law. Irrelevant. English.

EXTUMAE. Relics in churches and tombs. English.

EXUERE PATRIAM. To throw off or renounce one's country or native allegiance; to expatriate one's self. English. Moorhouse vs. Lord, 10 H. L. Cas. 272. See EXPATRIATION.

EXUPERARE. To overcome; to apprehend or take. English.

EYDE. Aid. English.

EYRE. A journey; the journey or circuit of the king's justices; the court of justices itinerant, or justices in eyre. English.

FABRICA. In Old English Law. The making or coining of money. Mem. in Scacc. H. 12 Edw. I. Burrill.

FAC SIMILE PROBATE. In England, where the construction of a will may be affected by the appearance of the original paper, the court will order the probate to pass in fac simile, as it may possibly help to show the meaning of the testator. 1 Wms. Ex., 7 Edit., 331, 386, 566. R. & L.

FACIENDO. Doing, making, or paying. One of the apt words of reserving a rent, used in ancient deeds. Co. Litt. 47a. Burrill.

FACILE. In Scotch Law. Easily persuaded. English.

FACTA. In Old English Law. Deeds. Burrill.

FACTO. In fact; by an act; by the act or fact. 3 Kent's Com. 55, 58. Burrill.

FACULTIES, COURT OF. See COURT OF FACULTIES.

FAINT OR FEIGNED ACTION. In Old English Practice. An action was so called, where the party bringing it had no title to recover, although the words of the writ were true; a false action was properly where the words of the writ were false. Litt. Sect. 689; Co. Litt. 361. Burrill.

FAIR. See UNFAIR HEARING (Supp.).

FAITOURS. Evil doers; tramps. English.

FALANG. A jacket or close coat. Blount; R. & L.

FALCIDIAN PORTION. That portion of a testator's estate which, by the Falcidian law, was required to be left to the heir, amounting to at least one-fourth. R. & L. See FALCIDIAN LAW.

FALSARIUS. A counterfeiter. English.

FALSE PRETENSE. At the common law, a false pretense is not a promise, but a fraudulent and false representation of an existing or past fact, designed to induce one to part with money or goods. 222 U. S. 173, quoting Bishop on Criminal Law, 6th Ed., sections 415, 419.

FARM LABORER. See EMPLOYEE (Supp.).

FATUITAS. In Old English Law. Fatuity; idiocy. Reg. Orig. 266.

FAVORITISM. See CONCESSION (Supp.).

FEASANCE. Doing. Feasor, a doer, or maker. See MALFEASANCE; MISFEASANCE; NONFEASANCE.

FEATHER BED. See PILLOW (Supp.).

FEDERAL RESERVE BANK. Within the Meaning of Section 24, Cl. 16, of the Judicial Code. A federal reserve bank is not a national banking association within this section of the code which declares that such associations, for the purposes of suing and being sued, shall (except in certain cases) be deemed citizens of the states where they are located. 256 U. S. 357.

FEE-SPLITTING. A practice in which part of the fee of an employment agency charged to the worker is paid over by the agency to the employer or his foreman. This practice is closely akin to job-selling by foremen and superintendents. Both "fee-splitting" and "job-selling" result in short-time employment and frequent discharges, for each time a job is filled a new fee is "split," or a fresh price exacted. The resultant wastage from accelerated labor turnover, from extortionate and multiplied fees, from demoralization of workers, from unemployment and irregularity of employment is incalculably great. 277 U. S. 367.

This practice has been reported as prevalent in railroad building where it is known as the "three-gang system"—at any one time there is one gang, just discharged, on its way home; another at work, but on the point of being dismissed; a third, hired by the agency and on its way to the job. Id., footnote.

FELLATION. See SODOMY.

FEODAL SYSTEM. See FEUDAL LAW.

FEODI FIRMARIUS. One who leases a fee farm. English.

FEONATIO. In Forest Law. The fawning season of deer. English.

FERMENTED. The terms "malt liquor" and "fermented liquor" in the internal revenue act of congress of June 6, 1872, are used synonymously. United States vs. Dooley, 21 Inst. Rev. Rec. 115; Nevin vs. Ladue, 3 Den. 437. Abbott.

FICTIO. In Roman Law. A fiction. See FICTION.

FIDELITY INSURANCE. See INSURANCE.

FIDUCIAL. See FIDUCIARY.

FILUM AQUAE. See AD MEDIUM FILUM AQUAE (Supp.).

FINDING. Within the Meaning of Section 15 (6) of the Amended Act to Regulate Commerce, authorizing the commission to readjust divisions of joint rates already received only when the joint rate was established pursuant to a finding or order of the commission made under section 15 (1) or (3), after full hearing in respect of the specific rate. Mere general permission or suggestion concerning rates for all carriers, without consideration of the reasonableness of any particular rate, is not the "finding or order" referred to above. Held that it refers to one which, after full hearing, determined and prescribed a rate thereafter to be observed. The contrary view would place substantially all presently existing rates in the class with particular rates established by order of the commission after full hearing, subject them to retroactive adjustments, and thus destroy the practical value of the distinction which congress carefully preserved. 276 U. S. 122.

FINE ADULLANDO LEVATO DE TENEMENTO QUOD FUIT DE ANTIQUO DOMINICO. An abolished writ for disannulling a fine levied of lands in ancient demesne to the prejudice of the lord. Reg. Orig. 15. R. & L.

FINE NON CAPIENDO PRO PULCHRE PLACITANDO. See DE FINE NON CAPIENDO, ETC. (Supp.).

FINE PRO REDISSEISINA CAPIENDO. See DE FINE REDISSEISINA CAPIENDO (Supp.).

FIRMATIO. Doe season; supplying with food. English.

FIRME. A farm.

FIRSTS. In a sale of goods, the terms "firsts" and "seconds" are terms of quality. They are to be distinguished from the term "Grade A" or the like which, in reference to linen, describes a particular texture. 271 U. S. 138.

FISHING BILL. See DISCOVERY, BILL OF (Supp.).

FISSURE VEIN. See MINES AND MINING.

FISTULA. In Civil Law. A pipe for conveying water. English.

FITZ. A son. It is used in law and genealogy; as Fitzherbert, the son of Herbert; Fitzroy, the son of the king. Originally applied to illegitimate children. Wharton; R. & L.

FLAGRANT DELIT. French Law. See FLAGRANT DELICTO.

FLAGRANT NECESSITY. A case of urgency rendering lawful an otherwise illegal act, as an assault to remove a man from impending danger. R. & L.

FLEE TO THE WALL. To use every means to get away from an assailant before killing him. English.

FLEMENE FRIT, FLEMENES FRINTHE, FLYMENA FRYNTHE. The reception or relief of a fugitive or outlaw. Jacob; R. & L.

FLEMESWITE. The possession of the goods of fugitives. Fleta, lib. 1, cxlviii. R. & L.

FLOORING, COST OF. There are three principal elements which enter into the computation of the cost of finished flooring. They are the cost of raw material; manufacturing cost; and the percentage of waste in converting rough lumber into flooring. 268 U. S. 568, 569.

FLOUR. See DOCKAGE; GRADING; WHEAT (Supp.).

FLUXUS. In Old English Law. Flow. Dal. Pl. 10. Burrill.

FLYMAN, FRYMTH. The offence of harboring a fugitive, the penalty attached to which was one of the rights of the crown. Anc. Inst. Eng. R. & L.

FORCIBLE TRESPASS. See FORCIBLE ENTRY OR DETAINER.

FOREIGN. Within the Meaning of the Revenue Act of 1918. When applied to a corporation or partnership means created or organized outside the United States. 265 U. S. 154. See CORPORATION (Supp.).

FOREIGN COUNTRY. A country under a sovereignty other than that of the United States. 182 U. S. 27. "By a foreign port may be understood a port within the dominions of a foreign sovereign and without the dominions of the United States." Id., quoting 2 Gall. 501. See also 19 Johns. 375; 18 How. 526.

FOREIGN PORT. See FOREIGN COUNTRY (Supp.).

FOREST RESERVE. A tract of land reserved in the United States as a forest to protect and preserve the headwaters of streams. English.

FORESTRY. The science and art of forming, caring for, or cultivating forests; the management of growing timber. Web. New Int. Dict.

FORGABULUM. See FORGAVEL.

FORM. See ORDER FORM (Supp.).

FORMAL. In accordance with established form; relating to form as distinguished from substance. English.

FORMED DESIGN. See INTENTION.

FORMER ADJUDICATION. See FORMER RECOVERY.

FORWARDS AND BACKWARDS. In Marine Insurance. A phrase meaning not only a ship's course from a port to its destination, but from one port to another in the course of that voyage. English.

FOTHER. An ancient English weight of about a ton. English.

FOUJDARRY ADAWLUT. The criminal courts of justice in India. English.

FOURTEENTH AMENDMENT. See EQUAL PROTECTION OF THE LAWS; CLASSIFICATION (Supp.).

FRACTIONAL CURRENCY. Pieces of money or notes less than the unit of value. In the United States, pieces less than a dollar. English.

FRACTIONAL QUARTER SECTION. In United States Public Land Law. A quarter section which, owing to lakes, rivers, or other water or waters within its boundaries, does not contain the full 160 acres of land designated as a quarter section. English.

FRAUNC, FRAUNCHE, FRAUNKE. See FRANK.

FRAUNCHISE. A franchise. English.

FREDNITE. An ancient liberty to hold court and make amercements. English.

FREE COMPETITION. A free and open market among both buyers and sellers for the sale and distribution of commodities. 268 U. S. 583. Competition does not become less free merely because the conduct of commercial operations becomes more intelligent through the free distribution of knowledge of all the essential factors entering into the commercial transaction. Restraint upon free competition begins when improper use is made of that information through any concerted action which operates to restrain the freedom of action of those who buy and sell. Id.

FREEDOM OF CONTRACT. See MONOPOLY (Supp.).

FREIGHT LINE COMPANY. Within the Meaning of a Law of Minnesota (Acts 1907, c. 250; 1909, c. 473; 1911, c. 377). A company furnishing or leasing cars to railroads for freight transportation. 246 U. S. 452.

FRENETICUS. A madman. English.

FRESCA. Fresh water; land floods. English.

FRET. In French Law. Freight. English.

FRETEUR. In French Law. Freight; a ship owner who lets it out to a merchant. English.

FRETTER. In French Law. To freight a ship; to let a ship. English.

FRIENDLINESS. See FRIENDLY RECEIVERSHIPS (Supp.).

FRIENDLY RECEIVERSHIPS. It has been held that there should be no "friendly" receiverships, because the receiver is an officer of the court and should be as free from "friendliness" to a party as should the court itself. 276 U. S. 55.

FUEL DEPOTS. Within the Meaning of the Appropriation Acts. Complete reserve fuel stations. 275 U. S. 33.

FUGITIVE FROM JUSTICE. A person charged by indictment, or affidavit before a magistrate, within a state with the commission of a crime covered by its laws and who leaves the state, no matter for what purpose nor under what belief, becomes from the time of such leaving and within the meaning of the constitution and laws of the United States, a fugitive from justice. 203 U. S. 222.

FUGITIVUS. In Civil Law. A fugitive; a runaway slave. Dig. 11, 4; Cod. 6, 1. Other definitions, Dig. 21, 1, 17. Burrill.

FULL HEARING. One in which ample opportunity is afforded to all parties to make, by evidence and argument, a showing fairly adequate to establish the propriety or impropriety, from the standpoint of justice and law, of the step asked to be taken. 261 U. S. 200.

FUND. A collection of money for a specific purpose; to capitalize; to convert into a fund. English. See ENDOWMENT; FUND; RESERVE FUNDS (Supp.).

FUNDAMENTAL ERROR. See ERROR.

FUNDED DEBT. A debt for which a fund has been set apart. English.

For national debt of Great Britain, see National Act, 1870.

FUNDING SYSTEM. A system of finance by which floating debts are changed into a permanent loan. English.

FURTHER ASSESSMENT. See ADDITIONAL ASSESSMENT (Supp.).

FUTURE HOMES. Treaties making general reservation of very extensive areas "as future homes" of Chippewa Indians, are to be construed as excepting swamp lands which had theretofore been granted to Minnesota. 270 U. S. 209. See GRANT HEREBY MADE (Supp.).

FUTURE SALES. See SPOT SALES (Supp.).

FUTURES. Sales for future delivery. Those who deal in "futures" on the exchange are divided into three classes: first, those who use them to hedge, i. e., to insure themselves against loss by unfavorable changes in price at the time of actual delivery of what they have to sell or buy in their business; second, legitimate capitalists who, exercising their judgment as to the conditions, purchase or sell for future delivery with a view to profit based on the law of supply and demand; and third, gamblers or irresponsible speculators who buy or sell as upon the turn of a card. 263 U. S. 619; 262 U. S. 1. See SPOT SALES.

GAFFOLDGILD. The payment of custom or tribute. Scott; R. & L.

GAFFOLDLAND. Property subject to the gaffoldgild, or liable to be taxed. Scott; R. & L.

GAIN. See INCOME; OTHER GAINS OR PROFITS (Supp.).

GLOVES. Ancient custom on maiden assize, when no offender to be tried, for the sheriff to present the judge with a pair of white gloves. Immemorial custom to remove the glove from right hand on taking oath. Wharton; R. & L.

GLUE. See ANIMAL GLUE (Supp.).

GLYN or GLEN. A hollow between two mountains; a valley. Co. Litt. 5b. R. & L.

GOAT, GOTE. A ditch, sluice, or gutter. English.

GOGING-STOLE. See CUCKING STOOL.

GOING CONCERN VALUE. See GOING VALUE; GOOD WILL (Supp.).

GOING VALUE. "Going value," or "going concern value," is the value which inheres in a plant where its business is established, as distinguished from one which has yet to establish its business. 238 U. S. 165. See GOOD WILL. That there is an element of value in an assembled and established plant, doing business and earning money, over one not thus advanced, is self-evident. This element of value is a property right, and should be considered in determining the value of the property, upon which the owner has a right to make a fair return when the same is privately owned although dedicated to public use. Id. Included in "going value" as usually reckoned is the investment necessary to organizing and establishing the business which is not embraced in the value of its actual physical property. Id.

GOLDWIT or GOLDWICH. A golden mulct. R. & L.

GORE. A narrow slip of land. Kenn. Par. Ant. 393. Cowell; R. & L.

GOSSIPRED. In the Canon Law. Comaternity; spiritual affinity. R. & L.

GOVERNMENTAL POWER. The federal constitution and state constitutions of the United States divide the governmental power into three branches. The first is the legislative, the second is the executive, and the third is the judicial. The rule is that in the actual administration of the government, congress or the legislature should exercise the legislative power, the president or the state executive, the governor, the executive power, and the courts or the judiciary the judicial power, and in carrying out that constitutional division into three branches it is a breach of the national fundamental law if congress gives up its legislative power and transfers it to the president, or to the judicial branch, or if by law it attempts to invest itself or its members with either executive power or judicial power. This is not to say that the three branches are not co-ordinate parts of one government and that each in the field of its duties may not invoke the action of the two other branches in so far as the action invoked shall not be an assumption of the constitutional field of action of another branch. In determining what it may do in seeking assistance from another branch, the extent and character of that assistance must be fixed according to common sense and the inherent necessities of the governmental co-ordination.

The field of congress involves all and many varieties of legislative action, and congress has found it frequently necessary to use officers of the executive branch, within defined limits, to secure the exact effect intended by its act of legislation, by vesting discretion in such officers to make public regulations interpreting a statute and directing the details of its execution, even to the extent of providing for penalizing a breach of such regulations. 276 U. S. 406; 220 U. S. 518; 204 U. S. 364; 192 U. S. 470; 165 U. S. 526; 214 U. S. 320.

Congress may feel itself unable conveniently to determine exactly when its exercise of the legislative power should become effective, because dependent on future conditions, and it may leave the determination of such time to the decision of an executive, or as often happens in matters of state legislation, it may be left to a popular vote of the residents of a district to be effected by the legislation. While in a sense one may say that such residents are exercising legislative power, it is not an exact statement, because the power has already been exercised legislatively by the body vested with that power under the constitution, the condition of its legislation going into effect being made dependent by the legislature on the expression of the voters of a certain district. Id., 407. See INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION; LEGISLATIVE POWER.

It may be stated as a general rule inherent in the American constitutional system, that, unless otherwise expressly provided or incidental to the powers conferred, the legislature cannot exercise either executive or judicial power; the executive cannot exercise either legislative or judicial power; and the judiciary cannot exercise either executive or legislative power. 277 U. S. 201.

Interdependence of. The federal constitution nowhere expressly declares that the three branches of the government shall be kept separate and independent. All legislative powers are vested in a congress. The executive power is vested in a president. The judicial power is vested in one supreme court and in such inferior courts as congress may from time to time establish. The judges are given life tenure and a compensation that may not be diminished during their continuance in office, with the evident purpose of securing them and their courts in independence of congress and the executive. Complete independence and separation between the three branches, however, are not attained, or intended, as other provisions of the constitution and the normal operation of government under it easily demonstrate. By affirmative action through the veto power, the executive and one more than one-third of either house may defeat all legislation. One-half of the house and two-thirds of the senate may impeach and remove the members of the judiciary. The executive can reprieve or pardon all offenses after their commission, either before trial, during trial, or after trial, by individuals, or by classes, conditionally or absolutely, and this without modification or regulation by congress. 4 Wall. 380. Negatively, one house of congress can withhold all appropriations and stop the operations of government. The senate can hold up all appointments, confirmation of which either the constitution or a statute requires, and thus deprive the president of the necessary agents with which he is to take care that the laws be faithfully executed.

There are some instances of positive and negative restraints possibly available under the constitution to each branch of the government in defeat of the action of the other. They show that the interdependence of each of the others is qualified and is so subject to exception as not to constitute a broadly positive injunction or a necessarily controlling rule of construction. The fact is that the judiciary, quite as much as congress and the executive, is dependent on the co-operation of the other two, that government may go on. Indeed, while the constitution has made the judiciary as independent of the other branches as is practicable, it is, as often remarked, the weakest of the three. It must look for a continuity of necessary co-operation, in the possible reluctance of either of the other branches, to the force of public opinion. 267 U. S. 119, 120.

GOVERNOR. See GOVERNMENTAL POWER (Supp.).

GRADING. Of Wheat. Includes an ascertainment of the proportions of clean wheat and of dockage in each lot of grain and an ascertainment of the quality of the wheat. 268 U. S. 193. See DOCKAGE; WHEAT (Supp.).

GRAIN. Within the Meaning of the Future Trading Act of August 24, 1921, providing for the taxation of contracts for the sale of grain for future delivery, etc. The word "grain" shall mean wheat, corn, oats, barley, rye, flax, and sorghum. 269 U. S. 479. See BOARD OF TRADE; CONTRACT OF SALE; DOCKAGE; GRADING; WHEAT (Supp.).

GRAMMAR SCHOOL. Intermediate between primary and high school. 16 Mass. 121; 2 Russ. 501; Jac. 474, 484; 103 Mass. 94, 97.

GRAMMATOPHYLACIUM. In the Civil Law. A place for keeping writings and records. Dig. 48, 19, 9, 6. Burrill.

GRANT HEREBY MADE. Within the Meaning of the Act of March 12, 1860, extending the provisions of the Swamp Land Act of 1850 to Minnesota and Oregon, with a proviso "that the grant hereby made shall not include any lands which the government of the United States may have reserved, sold, or disposed of (in pursuance of any law heretofore enacted) prior to the confirmation of title to be made under the authority of the said act." The phrase "be, and the same hereby are, extended" in the principal provision and the words "the grant hereby made" in the proviso signify an immediate extension to these new states of the grant in praesenti made to other states in 1850. 270 U. S. 203, 204. See HERETOFORE ENACTED (Supp.).

GRANT OF PERSONAL PROPERTY. A transfer of personal property for a consideration, as distinguished from a gift, which is gratuitous; an assignment. English.

GRANT TO USES. The common grant with uses superadded, which has become the favorite mode of transferring realty in England. Wharton; R. & L.

GRASS WIDOW. A married woman who lives apart from her husband. R. & L.

GRATIS. See A GRATIA (Supp.).

GRAVEYARD. See GRAVE.

GREAT CATTLE. Beasts except sheep and yearlings. English.

GREAT COUNCIL. The ancient council of the king of England, and out of which parliament grew. English.

GREAT MEN. Temporal lords; members of the house of commons. English.

GREAT ROLL. The roll in the English treasury containing the treasury accounts. English.

GROSS DAILY RATING. See RATING (Supp.).

GROSS INCOME. Within the Meaning of the Revenue Act of 1918. Includes gains, profits, and income derived from salaries, wages, or compensation for personal service (including in the case of the president of the United States, the judges of the supreme and inferior courts of the United States, and all other officers and employees, whether elected or appointed, of the United States, Alaska, Hawaii, or any political subdivision thereof, or the District of Columbia, the compensation received as such), of whatever kind and in whatever form paid, or from professions, vocations, trades, businesses, commerce, or sales, or dealings in property, whether real or personal, growing out of the ownership or use of or interest in such property; also from interest, rent, dividends, securities, or the transaction of any business carried on for gain or profit, or gains or profits and income derived from any source whatever. 268 U. S. 505, 506.

Within the Meaning of the Revenue Act of 1918, Section 233 (b). In the case of a foreign corporation, gross income includes only the gross income from sources within the United States, including the interest on bonds, notes, or other interest-bearing obligations of residents, corporate or otherwise, dividends from resident corporations, and including all amounts received (although paid under a contract for the sale of goods or otherwise) representing profits on the manufacture and disposition of goods within the United States. 267 U. S. 448.

Within the Meaning of the Revenue Act of 1921, Section 244 (a). In the case of a life insurance company, gross income means the gross amount of income received during the taxable year from interest, dividends, and rents. 277 U. S. 518. See NET INCOME (Supp.).

GROSS RECEIPTS FROM OPERATION. Within the Meaning of the California Political Code, Section 3664a. The term "gross receipts from operation" is defined to include all sums received from business done within the state of California, during the year ending the thirty-first day of December last, preceding, including the company's proportion of gross receipts from any and all sources on account of business done by it within the state, in connection with other companies described in this section of the code. 275 U. S. footnote to 398.

GROUND WRIT. Formerly a writ of execution could not be issued into a county different from that in which the venue in the action was laid, without first issuing a "ground writ" into the latter county, and then another writ which was called a "testum writ" into the former. English Common Law Procedure, Act. 1852, c. 121, abolished this useless process. Wharton; R. & L.

GUERNATOR. A pilot or steersman of a ship. English.

GUERNATORIAL. Relating to a governor, or office of governor. English.

GULTWIT or GUILTWIT. Amends for a trespass. R. & L.

GURGES. In Old English Law. A gulf or deep pit of water. Co. Litt. 5b. Burrill.

GURGITES. Wears. Jacob; R. & L.

GUTI or GOTTI. Goths, Jutae or Getae, who left Germany and came to inhabit England at an early period. Leg. Edw. Conf. c. 35. R. & L.

HIGHER AND LOWER SCALE. Refers to practice in English Supreme Court of Judicature to the two scales regulating the fees of the court and the fees which solicitors are entitled to charge. See Chapman vs. M. R. Co., 5 Q. B. D. 167, 431; Duke of Norfolk vs. Arbutnot, 6 Q. B. D. 190. R. & L.

HIGHNESS. A title of honor given to princes. The kings of England before the time of James I. were not usually saluted with title of "Majesty," but with that of "Highness." The children of crowned heads generally receive the style of "Highness." Wharton; R. & L.

HIGHWAY ACT. In English Law. The statute of 5 & 6 Will. IV. c. 50, 3; Steph. Com. 258. Burrill.

Highway Acts. Statutes relating to the laying out and maintenance of highways. English.

HIGHWAY, COMMON. See COMMON HIGHWAY.

HIGHWAY ROBBERY. Robbery upon the public highway; at one time punishable by death in England. In some of the United States a jury has power to fix sentence for highway robbery at imprisonment for life. English.

HIKENILDE STREET. One of the four Roman roads of Britain, leading from St. David's to Tynemouth. R. & L.

HILARY RULES. A collection of forms and orders which modified the pleading and practice in the English superior courts of common law established 1834. English.

HINDU. See CAUCASIAN (Supp.).

HINDUSTAN. See RACE (Supp.).

HIRCISCUNDA. See HERCISCUNDA.

HIS TESTIBUS. These witnesses; the attestation clause in deeds. English.

HITHERTO. To this time. English.

HLAF ÆTA. A servant fed at his master's cost. R. & L.

HLAFORD. A great lord with vassals; to him landless men might commend themselves. He was answerable to produce them when wanted for the purposes of justice. R. & L.

HOASTMEN. An ancient guild or fraternity in Newcastle-upon-Tyne, engaged in selling or shipping coal. Stat. 21 Jac. I. c. 3, § 12. R. & L.

HOBLERS. Light horsemen or tenants bound to maintain a cavalry to give notice of an invasion; those who used bows and arrows. English.

HOCCLUS SALTIS. A hoke, hole, or lesser pit of salt. Cowell; R. & L.

HOCKETTOR. An old or incapacitated knight; a basket carrier. English.

HOGASTER. A little hog; a young sheep. Cowell; R. & L.

HOLDES. Bailiffs of a town or city; a general. English.

HOMES. See FUTURE HOMES (Supp.).

HOMESTEAD. Under the constitution and statutes of Oklahoma, the family homestead of an Indian may include his tribal "homestead" allotment as well as his tribal "surplus" allotment. 264 U. S. 492.

HOMONYMIAE. In Civil Law. Cases wherein the law was laid down or stated more than once. English.

HONESTE VIVERE. To live honorably. One of the three general precepts adopted by Justinian as the fundamental principles of the law. Abbott. See ALTERUM NON LAEDERE (Supp.).

HONESTUS. Of good standing.

HONORARIUM JUS. In the Roman Law. The law of the praetors and the edicts of the aediles. R. & L.

HONORARY TRUSTEES. Trustees to preserve contingent remainders, so called because they are bound in honor only, to decide on the most proper and prudential course. Lew. Trusts, 408. R. & L.

HONTFONGENETHEF or HONFANGENETHEF. A thief taken with the thing stolen in his hand. Cowell; R. & L. See HAND-HABEND.

HONY. Evil; shame; disgrace. English.

HORN. See HORNING.

HORN WITH HORN or HORN UNDER HORN. The promiscuous feeding of bulls and cows, or all horned beasts that are allowed to run together upon the same common. Spel.; R. & L.

HOST PLANT. In reference to a communicable plant disease, "host plant" is the source of the disease. 276 U. S. 277.

HOSTELER or HOSTLER. An innkeeper. R. & L.

HOUSE OF REFORM. See REFORMATORY.

HOW NEAR. See LOCALITY (Supp.).

HYPOTHECA. The civil-law name for a species of contract; being a kind of pledge in which the pledgor or debtor retained possession and enjoyment of a thing; corresponded to the substance of the modern contract of mortgage. Abbott.

HYPOTHECATION BOND. A bottomry bond. English.

HYPOTHESIS. A logical supposition. English.

HYRNES. Parish. R. & L.

HYSTEROPOTMOI. Those who, thought dead, had, after a long absence in foreign countries, returned safely home. Among Romans, these not permitted to enter own homes through door but received at a passage opened in the roof. Encycl. Lond. R. & L.

ID CERTUM EST QUOD CERTUM REDDI POTEST. That is certain which can be made certain; whatever can be reduced to certainty is sufficiently certain. Abbott. 2 Bl. Com. 143; 2 Kent's Com. 462.

IDENTIFICATION. See IDENTITY.

IDONIETAS. In Old English Law. Competency; fitness. English.

IGNORANTIA FACTI EXCUSAT; IGNORANTIA JURIS NON EXCUSAT. Ignorance of fact excuses; ignorance of law does not excuse. 1 Col. 177. Abbott.

ILLEGAL INTEREST. See USURY.

IMAN, IMAM, IMAUM. A Mohammedan prince having supreme spiritual as well as temporal power; a regular priest of the mosque. R. & L.

IMBEZZLE. Old form. See EMBEZZLEMENT.

IMITATION. The making of one thing in the likeness of another. Under counterfeit law see 7 Pet. (U. S.) 136. See COUNTERFEIT.

IMMEMORIAL. Beyond the memory of man; before the time of Richard I.; before the year 1189. See TIME IMMEMORIAL.

IMMIGRANT. Within the Meaning of the Immigration Act of 1924. Any alien departing from any place outside the United States destined for the United States, except an alien entitled to enter the United States solely to carry on trade under and in pursuance of the provisions of a present existing treaty of commerce and navigation. 268 U. S. 344, 345. See QUOTA; ALIEN IMMIGRANTS.

IMMINENT DANGER. In relation to homicide in self-defence. See SELF-DEFENCE.

IMMISCERE (Lat.). In the Civil Law. To mix or mingle with; to meddle with; to join with. Calv. Lex. To take or enter upon an inheritance. Dig. 1, 17, 36. Burrill.

IMMITTERE (Lat.). In the Civil Law. To put or let into, as a beam into a wall. Calv. Lex.; Dig. 50, 17, 242, 1. Burrill.

IMMORAL. Contrary to public policy; illegal.

Immoral Contracts. Agreements in which the consideration is against good morals or public policy. English.

IMMUNITY FROM SUIT. Immunity from suit is a high attribute of sovereignty—a prerogative of the state itself. "This cannot be availed of by public agents when sued for their own torts. The eleventh amendment was not intended to afford them freedom from liability in any case where, under color of their office, they have injured one of the state's citizens. To grant them such immunity would be to create a privileged class free from liability from wrongs inflicted or injuries threatened. Public agents must be liable to the law, unless they are to be put above the law." 271 U. S. 431, quoting 221 U. S. 642.

IMPAIR. To weaken, diminish, or relax, or otherwise affect in an injurious manner. 6 Otto (U. S.) 600; 4 Litt. (Ky.) 53; 4 Metc. (Ky.) 294. R. & L.

IMPARCARE (L. Lat.). In Old English Law. To impound. Reg. Orig. 92b. To shut up or confine in prison. Bract. fol. 124. Burrill.

IMPATRONIZATION. The act of putting into full possession of a benefice. R. & L.

IMPEDITOR. The disturber in quare impedit. English.

IMPERFECT WAR. See WAR, PERFECT AND IMPERFECT (Supp.).

IMPETRARE (Lat.). In Old English Practice. To obtain by request, as a writ or privilege. Bract. fol. 57, 172b. Burrill.

IMPLIED CONTRACTS. See CONTRACT (Supp.).

IMPOSTS. See DUTIES AND IMPOSTS (Supp.).

IMPROPRIATOR. A layman who has obtained control of church property or revenue. English. See IMPROPRIATION.

IMPROVEMENT. See PATENT, PIONEER (Supp.).

IMPROVER. See INFRINGER (Supp.).

IN AUTRE SOILE (L. Fr.). In or on another's land. Dyer, 36b. (Fr. Ed.). Burrill.

IN EXITU (L. Lat.). In issue. 12 Mod. 372. Burrill.

IN FACIE CURIAE. In open court (q.s.). 267 U. S. 536.

IN INVIDIAM. To excite a prejudice. R. & L.

IN MOTION. See MOTION (Supp.).

IN OPEN COURT. Under the eye or within the view of the court. 267 U. S. 535.

Contempt in Open Court. To preserve order in the court room for the proper conduct of business, the court must act instantly to suppress disturbance or violence or physical obstruction or disrespect to the court when occurring in open court. There is no need of evidence or assistance or counsel before punishment, because the court has seen the offence. Such summary vindication of the court's dignity and authority is necessary. It has always been so in the courts of the common law and the punishment imposed is due process of law. 267 U. S. 534. In 128 U. S. 289 it was held that a court of the United States upon the commission of a contempt in open court might upon its own knowledge of the facts without further proof, without issue or trial, and without hearing an explanation of the motives of the offender, immediately proceed to determine whether the facts justified punishment and to inflict such punishment as was fitting under the law. Id., 534, 535. See IN THE PRESENCE OF THE COURT.

When the contempt is not in open court, however, there is no such right or reason in dispensing with the necessity of charges and the opportunity of the accused to present his defence by witnesses and argument. Id., 536. Due process of law in the prosecution of contempt, except of that committed in open court, requires that the accused should be advised of the charges and have a reasonable opportunity to meet them by way of defence or explanation. Id., 537; 131 U. S. 267. See CONTEMPT.

IN PLACE. Relating to mines. See MINES AND MINING.

IN PURSUANCE OF ANY LAW. See HERETOFORE ENACTED (Supp.).

IN RESTRAINT OF TRADE. See MONOPOLY (Supp.).

IN THE COURSE OF PROFESSIONAL PRACTICE ONLY. See TO A PATIENT (Supp.).

IN THE FACE OF THE COURT. In open court (q.s.). 267 U. S. 536.

IN THE PRESENCE OF THE COURT. The court, at least when in session, is present in every part of the place set apart for its own use, and for the use of its officers, jurors, and witnesses; and misbehavior anywhere in such place is misbehavior in the presence of the court. 267 U. S. 535. See IN OPEN COURT (Supp.).

IN TRANSIT. See TRANSIT (Supp.).

INADEQUATE. Insufficient.

Inadequate Damages. See DAMAGES.

Inadequate Price. See ADEQUATE (Supp.).

INAEEDIFICATIO (Lat.). In the Civil Law. Building on; the building on another's land, with one's own materials; building on one's own land with another's material. 1 Mackeld. Civ. Law, 283, ¶268. Burrill.

INANTEA (L. Lat.). From this day forth. Burrill.

INBOUND COMMON. An unenclosed common, marked out, however, by boundaries. R. & L.

INCARCERATION. See IMPRISONMENT.

INCHARTARE. To give or grant and assure anything by a written instrument. R. & L.

INCIDERE. In Civil and Old English Law. To fall into; to fall out; to happen; to come to pass; to fall under or upon; to become subject or liable to. Calv. Lex. Brissotius; Burrill.

INCILE. In Civil Law. A trench; a ditch; a well. English. Dig. 43, 21, 1, 5.

INCISED WOUND. In Medical Jurisprudence. A cut or incision on a human body; a wound made by a cutting instrument, such as a razor. Burr. Circ. Evid. 693; Wharton & Stille's Med. Jur. ¶808. Burrill.

INCITE. To urge or stimulate a person to commit a crime. English.

INCIVILE. Irregular; against due course of law. English.

INCIVISM. Unfriendliness to the state or government of which one is a citizen. R. & L.

INCLAUSA. A home; close or enclosure near a house. Cowell; R. & L.

INCLUDE. To confine within; to hold; to contain; to shut up, as, the shell of a nut includes the kernel; a pearl is included in the shell. To comprehend, as a genus the species, the whole a part, an argument or reason the inference; to contain; to embrace; to relate to; to pertain to; as Great Britain includes England, Scotland, and Wales. 221 U. S. 461, quoting Webster.

To confine within something; hold as in an inclosure; to inclose; to contain. To comprise as a part, or as something incident or pertinent; comprehend; take in; as the greater includes the less; the Roman Empire included many nations. 221 U. S. 465, quoting the Century Dictionary.

Including. The participle of the word "include." Being a participle it is in the nature of an adjective and is a modifier. The word "including" as a word of enlargement is its exceptional sense. Id., 466. See also 147 Fed. Rep. 199; 106 Fed. Rep. 73; 75 N. Y. Supp. 750.

INCOME. Within the Meaning of the Sixteenth Amendment and in the various revenue acts subsequently passed. "Income" has been taken to mean the same thing as used in the Corporation Excise Tax Act of 1909. 271 U. S. 174; 255 U. S. 519; 247 U. S. 335. After full consideration the United States Supreme Court declared that income may be defined as gain derived from capital, from labor, or from both combined, including profit gained through sale or conversion of capital. Id.; 241 U. S. 415; 252 U. S. 207; 247 U. S. 185. And that definition has been adhered to and applied repeatedly. Id.; 268 U. S. 633; 268 U. S. 167; 265 U. S. 194; 259 U. S. 182-251; 257 U. S. 169; 255 U. S. 535; 255 U. S. 518. In determining what constitutes income, substance rather than form is to be given controlling weight. Id.; 252 U. S. 206. The mere diminution of loss is not gain, profit, or income. Id., 175. See GROSS INCOME; PAID.

INCOME TAX. A recognized method of distributing the burdens of government, favored because requiring contributions from those who realize current pecuniary benefits under the protection of the government, and because the tax may be readily proportioned to their ability to pay. 252 U. S. 51. See TAXATION; POWER OF (Supp.).

INCOPOLITUS. A proctor; a vicar. English.

INCORPORAMUS (L. Lat.). We incorporate. One of the words by which a corporation may be created in England. 1 Bl. Com. 473. Burrill.

INCUMBRANCER. The holder of an incumbrance, e. g. a mortgage, on the estate of another. R. & L.

INCURRAMENTUM. The liability to a fine, penalty, or amercement. Cowell; R. & L.

INDE. Thence; thereof; therefrom; thereupon. English.

INDEBITUM (Lat.). In the Civil Law. Not due or owing. Dig. 12, 6; Calv. Lex. Burrill.

INDEFINITE TIME. See FOR AN INDEFINITE TIME (Supp.).

INDETERMINATE PERMIT. Within the Meaning of the Public Utility Law of 1911, Section 1297m-1. The term "indeterminate permit" shall mean and embrace every grant, directly or indirectly, from the state, to any corporation, company, individual, association of individuals, their lessees, trustees, or receivers appointed by any court whatsoever, or power, right, or privilege to own, operate, manage, or control any plant or equipment or any part of a plant or equipment within the state for the production, transmission, delivery, or furnishing of heat, light, water, or power, either directly or indirectly, to or for the public. 263 U. S. 132.

INDEX. That part of a book which gives in alphabetical order a brief summary of the contents. English.

INDEX AD SECTAM. Index of instrument delivered or made to a plaintiff in a cause.

INDEX, DIRECT. Names of first parties to recorded instruments.

Index, Indirect. Names of second parties to recorded instruments. English.

INDIA. See RACE (Supp.).

INDIAN. See TRIBE (Supp.).

INDIAN TRIBE. Within the Meaning of the Acts of 1834, C. 161, Sec. 12, 4 Stat. 730, and 1851, C. 14, Sec. 7, 9 Stat. 587. The term "Indian tribe" was here used in the sense of "a body of Indians of the same or similar race, united in a community under one leadership or government, and inhabiting a particular though sometimes ill-defined territory." 271 U. S. 442, quoting 180 U. S. 266. In that sense the term includes the Pueblo Indians. Id. See ANY TRIBE OF INDIANS.

INDIAN WARS. See WAR, PERFECT AND IMPERFECT (Supp.).

INDIGNITY. Applied to divorce proceeding. See DIVORCE.

INDUMENT. See ENDOWMENT.

INDUSTRIAL TRACK. Within the Meaning of Paragraph 22 of the Transportation Act, 1920. Such tracks as spur, industrial, team, switching, or side tracks are commonly constructed either to improve the facilities required by shippers already served by the carrier or to supply the facilities to others, who being within the same territory and similarly situated are entitled to like service from the carrier. The question whether the construction should be allowed or compelled depends largely upon local conditions which the state regulating body is peculiarly fitted to appreciate. Moreover, the expenditure involved is ordinarily small. But where the proposed track extends into territory not theretofore served by the carrier, and particularly where it extends into territory already served by another carrier, its purpose and effect are, under the policy of congress, of national concern. For invasion through new construction of territory adequately served by another carrier, like the establishment of excessively low rates in order to secure traffic enjoyed by another, may be inimical to the national interest. 270 U. S. 278. See EXTENSION OF RAILROAD (Supp.).

INEQUALITY. See CONCESSION (Supp.).

INEWARDUS. A guard; a watchman. Domesd. R. & L.

INFANTIA. In Civil Law. The period of infancy between birth and the age of seven years. Calv. Lex. R. & L.

INFANTS' MARRIAGE SETTLEMENT ACT. Infant male, not under twenty years, or infant female, not under seventeen years, may with sanction of court of chancery to be obtained on petition, make a valid and binding settlement of his or her property upon occasion of his or her marriage, except as regards estates tail and power of appointment, such settlement will hold good, even though the infant settlor should die under age of twenty-one. Stat. 18 & 19 Vict. c. 43. Brown; R. & L.

INFECTIO. Taint of illegality. English.

INFENSARE CURIAM. A court when it suggests to counsel something he has forgotten or is ignorant of. English.

INFERENTIAL. Presumptive; deducible by inference. English.

INFEUODATION. The placing in possession of a freehold estate; also the granting of tithes to mere laymen. R. & L.

INFICIARI (Lat.). In the Civil Law. To deny; to refuse to pay a debt or restore a pledge. Calv. Lex. Burrill.

INFIDUCIARE. In Old Law. To pledge property. English.

INFRA ANNOS NUBILER. Under marriageable years. English.

INFRA FUREM (L. Lat.). During madness; while in a state of insanity. Bract. fol. 19b. Burrill.

INFRA LIGEANTIAM REGIS. Within the king's ligeance. Comb. 212. Burrill.

INFRA METAS. Within the bounds or limits. Burrill.

INFRA QUATUOR MARIA. Within the four seas. Litt. Sect. 157. Within the kingdom of England and the dominions of the same kingdom. Co. Litt. 107a. Burrill.

INFRINGER. In Patent Law. An improver who appropriates, without license, the basic patent of another. 275 U. S. 328.

INFULA. A priest's garment; a cassock. English.

INGRATITUDE. In Roman law ingratitude was, and in French law is, but in the English law is not, a sufficient cause for revoking a donation or gift of property, or of liberty. R. & L.

INHOC. A corner in a common field cultivated. English.

INHONESTUS. In Old English Law. Not in proper order. English.

INIQUITY. In Scotch Law. A decision by an inferior judge, contrary to law. English.

INJUSTICE. Denial of justice; an act contrary to equity. English.

INLANTAL, INLANTALE. Demesne or inland, opposed to delantal or land tenanted. Cowell; R. & L.

INLAUGHE. In Old English Law. Under the law. English.

IN-LAW. To restore to civil rights; to restore to the protection of the law. English.

INLEASED. Intangled and snared. A word used in a champion's oath. English. Inst. 247.

INLEGIARE. To admit a person to the protection of the law, after undergoing a legal punishment for a delinquency. R. & L.

INNER BARRISTER. In England, a barrister admitted within the bar; a queen's counsel. English.

INNER HOUSE. The name given to the chamber where the first and second divisions of the court of sessions in Scotland hold their sittings. R. & L.

INQUILINUS. In Roman Law. The hirer of a house; a tenant of a house in a city. English.

INQUIRENDO. An authority given to some official person to institute an inquiry concerning the crown's interests. R. & L.

INQUIRY. See JUDICIAL INQUIRY (Supp.).

INSCRIBERE. In Civil Law. To subscribe an accusation; to bind one's self, in case of failure to prove an accusation, to suffer the same punishment which the accused would have suffered had he been proved guilty. Calv. Lex. Burrill.

INSETENTA. An inditch or grave in a ditch. R. & L.

INSIDIOUS MACHINATIONS. Within the Meaning of Article 1269 of the Philippine Civil Code. A deceitful scheme or plot with an evil design, or, in other words, with a fraudulent purpose. 213 U. S. 430.

INSIGNIA. Ensigns or arms; distinctive marks; characteristics. R. & L.

INSINUATIO (L. Lat.). In Old English Law. Information or suggestion. Reg. Jud. 25, 50. Burrill.

INSPECTATOR. A prosecutor or adversary. R. & L.

INSTITUTIO HAEREDIS. In Roman Law. The appointment of the haeres in the will; corresponds nearly to nomination of an executor in English law. Without such an appointment the will was void at law, but the praetor would, under certain circumstances, carry out the intentions of the testator. Brown; R. & L.

INSTITUTIONES. See INSTITUTES.

INSUCKEN MOLTURES. See THIRLAGE.

INSURANCE. See INSURANCE CARRIER; RETROCESSION CONTRACTS (Supp.).

INSURANCE CARRIER. Within the Meaning of the Compensation Law as Amended by the Laws of 1922. The state fund, or corporation or association with which an employer has insured, or an employer permitted to become a "self-insurer." 265 U. S. 373, footnote.

INSURANCE COMPANY. See CORPORATION; MUTUAL, LEVEL PREMIUM PLAN; RESERVE FUNDS (Supp.).

INTAKES. Temporary inclosures made of waste lands; that which is taken in as parks from a farm. English. Elt. Com. 277.

INTANGIBLE PROPERTY. See PROPERTY.

INTEND. To set the mind upon as a purpose to be effected. English.

INTENT. As vaguely used in ordinary legal discussion means no more than knowledge at the time of the act that the consequences said to be intended will ensue. Even less than that will satisfy the general principle of civil and criminal liability. But when words are used exactly, a deed is not done with intent to produce a consequence unless that consequence is the aim of the deed. It may be obvious, and obvious to the actor, that the consequence will follow, and he may be liable for it even if he regrets it, but he does not do the act with intent to produce it unless the aim to produce it is the proximate motive of the specific act, although there may be some deeper motive behind. 250 U. S. 626, 627.

INTER RUSTICOS. Among the illiterate or unlearned. R. & L.

INTERCOMMUNING. Letters from Scotch privy council passing in the king's name, charging the lieges not to resist, supply, or intercommune with the persons thereby denounced under pain of being reputed art and part in their crime and dealt with accordingly; and desiring all sheriffs, bailies, etc., to apprehend and commit such rebels to prison. Bell; Abbott.

INTERCONTINENTAL RAILWAY COMMISSION. Organized to examine the routes and furnish estimates of cost, etc., for an intercontinental railway to connect the United States with other republics on the American continent; headquarters in Washington, D. C. English.

INTERCOURSE. Communication, correspondence, or association. English.

INTEREST. A means of compensation. 266 U. S. 307. A consideration paid for the use of money or for forbearance in demanding it when due. Id. See BENEFICIAL USE; PENALTY.

INTERMEDDLE. Forbidding defendant to intermeddle with property, means to meddle with it improperly; to do something to or with it that may affect injuriously the plaintiff's right in the action. McQueen vs. Babcock, 41 Barb. 337. Abbott.

INTERMEDIARY. One who negotiates a matter between two persons; a broker. English.

INTERNATIONAL COMMERCE. See COMMERCE WITH FOREIGN NATIONS.

INTERNUNCIUS. A messenger between others. English.

INTERPRETATION. See PUNCTUATION (Supp.).

INTERRUPTIO (Lat.). Interruption. A term used both in the civil and common law of prescription. 2 Inst. 654. Burrill.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE. Interstate commerce—if not always, at any rate when the commerce is transportation—is an act. The act of interstate commerce is done by the labor of men and with the help of things; and these men and things are the agents and instruments of the commerce. If the agents or instruments are destroyed while they are doing the act, commerce is stopped; if the agents or instruments are interrupted, commerce is interrupted; if the agents or instruments are not of the right kind or quality, commerce in consequence becomes slow or costly or unsafe or otherwise inefficient; and if the conditions under which the agents or instruments do the work of commerce are wrong or disadvantageous, those had conditions may and often will prevent or interrupt the act of commerce or make it less expeditious, less reliable, less economical, and less secure. 223 U. S. 48. See COMMERCE.

Coal mining is not interstate commerce and obstruction of coal mining, though it may prevent coal from going into interstate commerce, is not a restraint of that commerce unless the obstruction to mining is intended to restrain commerce in it or has necessarily such a direct, material, and substantial effect to restrain it that the intent reasonably must be inferred. 259 U. S. 410, 411.

The negotiation of sales of goods which are in another state, for the purpose of introducing them into the state in which the negotiation is made, is interstate commerce. 268 U. S. 335; 264 U. S. 150; 227 U. S. 389; 203 U. S. 507; 153 U. S. 289; 120 U. S. 497.

An expressed purpose to prevent possible frauds is not enough to justify legislation which really interferes with the free flow of legitimate interstate commerce. Id., 336. See WHEAT.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION. One of the great functions conferred on congress by the federal constitution is the regulation of interstate commerce and rates to be exacted by interstate carriers for the passenger and merchandise traffic. The rates to be fixed are myriad. If congress were to be required to fix every rate, it would be impossible to exercise the power at all. Therefore, common sense requires that in the fixing of such rates, congress may provide a commission, as it does, called the Interstate Commerce Commission, to fix those rates, after hearing evidence and argument concerning them from interested parties, all in accord with a general rule that congress first lays down, that rates shall be just and reasonable considering the service given, and not discriminatory. 276 U. S. 408.

As said by the United States Supreme Court in 224 U. S. 214, "The congress may not delegate its purely legislative power to a commission, but, having laid down the general rules of action under which a commission shall proceed, it may require of that commission the application of such rules to particular situations and the investigation of facts, with a view to making orders in a particular matter within the rules laid down by the congress." Id.

The principle upon which such a power is upheld in state legislation is stated by Judge Mitchell in 38 Minn. 298-302: "If such a power is to be exercised at all, it can only be satisfactorily done by a board or commission, constantly in session, whose time is exclusively given to the subject, and who, after investigation of the facts can fix rates with reference to the peculiar circumstances of each road, and each particular kind of business, and who can change or modify these rates to suit the ever-varying conditions of traffic. Our legislature has gone a step further than most others, and vested our commission with full power to determine what rates are equal and reasonable in each particular case. Whether this was wise or not is not for us to say; but in doing so we cannot see that they have transcended their constitutional authority. They have not delegated to the commission any authority or discretion as to what the law shall be—which would not be allowable—but have merely conferred upon it an authority and discretion, to be exercised in the execution of the law, and under and in pursuance of it, which is entirely permissible. The legislature itself has passed upon the expediency of the law, and what it shall be. The commission is intrusted with no authority or discretion upon these questions." Id., 408, 409.

INTERVENE. v. Literally (inter, between, and venire, come), to come between. 223 U. S. 330, quoting Webster and Century dictionaries. In legal proceedings, the word covers the right of one to interpose in, or become a party to, a proceeding already instituted, as a creditor may intervene in a foreclosure suit to enforce a lien upon property or some right in connection therewith; a stockholder may sometimes intervene in a suit brought by a corporation; the government is sometimes allowed to intervene in suits between private parties to protect a public interest. Id.

INTITLE. An old form of entitle. 6 Mod. 304. Burrill.

INTOLERABLE CRUELTY. In Law of Divorce. See DIVORCE.

INTOXICATING LIQUOR. See LIQUOR (Supp.).

INTRA. Within. See also titles under INFRA.

INTRA MOENIA. Within the walls; domestic. English.

INTRA PARIETES. Between the walls; among friends out of court; without contest. English.

INTRANSIGENTES. Those who refuse to agree or compromise; applied to Cuban insurgents. English.

INTRA-TERRITORIAL. Within the territory; within the jurisdiction. English.

INVENTION. See COMBINATION (Supp.).

INVESTED CAPITAL. Within the Meaning of the Revenue Act, 1918, Title III, Section 326. This section defines "invested capital," with certain exceptions, as the actual cash and cash value of other property, bona fide paid in for stock or shares, at the time of such payment, and paid-in or earned surplus and undivided profits; not including surplus and undivided profits earned during the year. 275 U. S. 216, 217. Article 838 of Treasury Regulations, 45 (1920 Ed.), p. 204, declared that: "Only true earned surplus and undivided profits can be included in the computation of invested capital. In the computation full recognition must first be given to all expenses incurred and losses sustained from the original organization of the corporation down to the taxable year. There can, of course, be no earned surplus or undivided profits until any deficit or impairment or paid-in capital due to depletion, depreciation, expense, losses, or any other cause has been made good." Id. See 269 U. S. 216, footnote. See UNDIVIDED PROFITS; SURPLUS.

INVESTIGATION. Denotes inquiry either by observation, experiment, or discussion. Wright vs. Chicago, 48 Ill. 285. Abbott.

JUDICIAL INQUIRY. A judicial inquiry investigates, declares, and enforces liabilities as they stand on present or past facts and under laws supposed already to exist. That is its purpose and end. 257 U. S. 554, quoting 211 U. S. 225, 226. Legislation on the other hand looks to the future and changes existing conditions by making a new rule to be applied thereafter. Id.

JUDICIAL POWER. See GOVERNMENTAL POWER (Supp.).

JUDICIAL SALE. Within the Meaning of the Indiana Judicial Sales Act (Rev. Stats. 1887, Sections 2508, 2509). The adjudication of a husband as a bankrupt, followed by appointment of a trustee in bankruptcy, operates as a "judicial sale" of his real estate, in virtue of which the wife's inchoate interest in his real estate (not exceeding $20,000) thereupon becomes absolute and free from the demands of creditors as and to the extent provided by sections 2483-2491 in case of his death. 271 U. S. 188; 138 Ind. 634; 97 Ind. 460; 89 Ind. 222; 88 Ind. 246; 79 Ind. 570; 78 Ind. 565; 75 Ind. 502; 73 Ind. 151; 73 Ind. 143; 68 Ind. 67. In 68 Ind. 67 it was said that "the foundation of all subsequent proceedings (q. v.) in bankruptcy, including the conveyance by the judge or register to the assignee, is the previous adjudication of the debtor's bankruptcy. That adjudication gives character to the conveyance made by the judge or register to the assignee, and makes it a judicial sale. It is judicial because it is founded on the judgment of the court. That the conveyance thus made by the judge or register must be regarded as a sale within the meaning of our statute, we think is equally clear." Id., 189.

JUDICIARY. See GOVERNMENTAL POWER (Supp.).

JUDICIUM A NON SUO JUDICE DATUM NULLIUS EST MOMENTI (10 Co. 70). A judgment given by one who is not the proper judge is of no force. R. & L.

JUDICIUM EST QUASI JURIS DICTUM. Judgment is, as it were, a dictum of law. Abbott.

JUDICIUM NON DEBET ESSE ILLUSORIUM; SUUM AFFECTUM HABERE DEBET. A judgment ought not to be illusory; it ought to have its consequences. Abbott.

JURISDICTION. See EXCLUSIVE; ORIGINAL JURISDICTION (Supp.).

JURISDICTION (OF THE DISTRICT COURT). Within the Meaning of Section 238 of the Judicial Code. The jurisdiction of the district court is in issue only when its power to hear and determine the cause, as defined and limited by the constitution or statutes of the United States, is in controversy. 264 U. S. 277, 278; 255 U. S. 218; 222 U. S. 201; 190 U. S. 37; 187 U. S. 432; 161 U. S. 358. That is, when "its power to entertain the suit under the laws of the United States" is in issue. Id., 234 U. S. 371. Where a district court is vested with jurisdiction of a cause, the question whether as a court of equity it has power to entertain the suit and afford the plaintiff equitable relief, does not present a jurisdictional issue. Id., 208 U. S. 427.

LARCENY, COMPOUND. Larceny from one's house or person. English.

LARCENY, GRAND. See GRAND LARCENY.

LARCENY, PETIT. See LARCENY.

LAST CLEAR CHANCE. By the doctrine of the last clear chance, a negligent defendant will be held liable to a negligent plaintiff if the defendant, aware of the plaintiff's peril or unaware of it only through carelessness, had in fact a later opportunity than the plaintiff to avert an accident. 275 U. S. 241; 144 U. S. 428; 139 U. S. 558. The doctrine rests on the assumption that he is the more culpable whose opportunity to avoid the injury was later. Id. In the cases applying the rule the parties have been engaged in independent courses of negligent conduct. Therefore, the doctrine is inapplicable in cases where the courses of conduct were not so independent that either one or the other could be said to have had in fact a later opportunity to avoid the consequences of their joint negligence. Id.

LATERARE. To lie sideways, in opposition to lying endways; used in descriptions of lands. R. & L.

LATROCINATION. The act of robbing. English.

LATTER PART OF THE MONTH. Construed to mean all the last part of the month, and to include the whole of last day. Action commenced on last day of month on an obligation requiring performance "in the latter part" is prematurely brought. Baily vs. Ricketts, 4 Ind. 488. Abbott.

of money fixed in a mortgage; time after which rights are forfeited. English.

LAWFUL MAN. A man free and legally capable of making oath. English.

LAWING OF DOGS. The cutting several claws of the forefeet of dogs in the forest, to prevent their running at deer. R. & L.

LE GUIDON (or LE GUIDON DE LA MER). Title of a celebrated French treatise on law of insurance, earliest extant. Prepared for use of merchants in Rowen in 16th century; author unknown. 3 Kent. Com. 346. Burrill.

LECHERWITE. See LAIRWITE.

LEET. See COURT LEET.

LEGACY. A legacy to an executor even expressed to be for care and pains, is not to be regarded in the light of a debt or as founded in contract, or to be governed by the principles applicable to contract. When a legacy is given to a person in the character of executor, so as to attach this implied condition to it, the question generally has been upon the sufficient assumption of the character to entitle the party to the same. The cases establish the general rule that it will be a sufficient performance of the condition, if the legatee prove the will with a bona fide intention to act under it or unequivocally manifest an intention to act in the executorship, as, for instance, by giving directions about the funeral of the testator, but is prevented by death from further performing the duties of his office. 263 U. S. 185, quoting 2 Edwards Chancery 179.

LEGATUM OPTIONIS. In Roman Law. A legacy of such articles as the legatee might desire to select from the testator's estate. English.

LEGIBUS SOLUTIS. Released from the laws; not bound by the laws. An expression applied in the Roman civil law to the emperor. Calv. Lex.; 3 Gibbon's Rom. Emp. 157 (Am. Ed. 1844). Burrill.

LEGISLATION. Unlike other state action, legislation consists of rules having continuing force and intended to be observed and applied in the future; and this regardless of the state agency from which it proceeds. 277 U. S. 104. See LEGISLATIVE ACTS OF THE STATE; JUDICIAL INQUIRY (Supp.).

LEGISLATIVE ACTS OF THE STATE. Whether the state legislative power be exerted in one form or another, or by one agency or another, the enactments put forth, whether called constitutional provisions, laws, ordinances, or orders, are in essence legislative acts of the state. They express its will and have no force otherwise. As respects their validity under the constitution of the United States all are on the same plane. 277 U. S. 103; 249 U. S. 577. See STATUTE; STATUTE OF ANY STATE (Supp.).

LEGISLATIVE POWER. Legislative power, as distinguished from executive power, is the authority to make laws, but not to enforce them or to appoint the agents charged with the duty of enforcing them. The latter are executive functions. 277 U. S. 202; 272 U. S. 52. See GOVERNMENTAL POWER (Supp.).

LEGISLATURE. See GOVERNMENTAL POWER (Supp.).

LEGIT VEL NON. Does he read or not? The question propounded to the ordinary regarding one who claimed benefit of clergy. English.

LIBERTATIBUS ALLOCANDIS. See DE LIBERTATIBUS ALLOCANDIS.

LIBERTY OF CONSCIENCE. The right to be free to reject any religious belief or practice. The state cannot compel a man to comply with a form of religion, but can prohibit any religion which is against public policy. English. See RELIGION.

LIBERTY OF SPEECH. The freedom of speech and of the press which is secured by the constitution, does not confer an absolute right to speak or publish, without responsibility, whatever one may choose, or an unrestricted and unbridled license that gives immunity for every possible use of language and prevents the punishment of those who abuse this freedom. 268 U. S.

666; 2 Story on the Constitution, 5th Ed., sect. 1580, p. 634; 254 U. S. 332; 251 U. S. 474; 249 U. S. 213; 249 U. S. 206; 249 U. S. 52; 236 U. S. 276; 205 U. S. 462; 165 U. S. 281. Reasonably limited, this freedom is an inestimable privilege in a free government; without such limitation, it might become the scourge of the republic. Id., Story, supra. A state in the exercise of its police power may punish those who abuse this freedom by utterances inimical to the public welfare, tending to corrupt public morals, incite to crime, or disturb the public peace. Id., 667. Freedom of speech and press does not protect disturbances to the public peace or the attempt to subvert the government. It does not protect publications or teachings which tend to subvert or imperil the government or to impede or hinder it in the performance of its governmental duties. It does not protect publications prompting the overthrow of government by force; the punishment of those who publish articles which tend to destroy organized society being essential to the security of freedom and the stability of the state. In short, this freedom does not deprive a state of the primary and essential right of self-preservation. Id., 668; 304 Ill. 34; 92 N. J. L. 274; 187 Cal. 375; 194 U. S. 294. "The safeguarding and fructification of free and constitutional institutions is the very basis and mainstay upon which the freedom of the press rests, and that freedom, therefore, does not and cannot be held to include the right virtually to destroy such institutions." Id., quoting 247 U. S. 419.

LIBERTY OF THE PRESS. See LIBERTY OF SPEECH (Supp.).

LIBRATA TERRAE. Four oxgangs of land (56 acres). As much land as produced twenty shilling a year. English.

LICENSING ACTS. Applied by Hallam (Const. Hist. ch. 13) to acts of parliament for restraint of printing except by license. Generally means acts regulating sale of intoxicating liquors. Mozley & W.; Abbott.

LICKING OF THUMBS. An ancient formality by which bargains were complete. R. & L.

LIEN. See EQUITABLE LIEN (Supp.).

LIGHTERAGE. In the sense of the price paid for unloading ships by lighters or boats, does not embrace a charge for taking a boat to another pier instead of the usual one of delivery. West. Trans. Co. vs. Hawley, 1 Daly, 327. Abbott.

LIMITATIONS. For section defining accruing. See ACCRUING (Supp.).

LIQUERE. In the Civil Law. To be clear. English.

LIQUOR. Within the Meaning of Title II and Title III of the Prohibition Act. The word "liquor" or the phrase "intoxicating liquor" shall be construed to include alcohol, brandy, whiskey, rum, gin, beer, ale, porter, and wine, and in addition thereto any spirituous, vinous, malt, or fermented liquor, liquids, and compounds, whether medicated, proprietary, patented, or not, and by whatever name called, containing one-half of 1 per centum or more of alcohol by volume which are fit for use for beverage purposes. 268 U. S. 467, 468, quoting section 1 of the act.

LITEM SUAM FACERE. In Roman Law. To make a suit his own. Calv. Lex. When judge favors or opposes he is said litem suam facere. Inst. 4, 5, Pr. Burrill.

LITERATE. One who qualifies himself for holy orders by presenting himself as a person accomplished in classical learning, etc., not as a graduate of Oxford, Cambridge, etc. Wharton; R. & L.

LIVE-STOCK. See RUNNING AT LARGE.

LOAN. See LOAN TICKET (Supp.).

LOAN ASSOCIATION. See BUILDING ASSOCIATIONS.

LOAN GRATUITOUS. A loan of an article to be used by the borrower. English.

LOAN TICKET. Documentary evidence of transactions commonly known in the stock-brokerage business as the "loan" of shares of stock and the return by the borrower to the lender of shares of stock "borrowed." 269 U. S. 449. See SHORT SALE (Supp.).

LOCAL. As to local "Act of Parliament"; "assessment"; "chattel"; "influence"; see those titles.

LOCAL JURISDICTION. See ORIGINAL JURISDICTION (Supp.).

LOCAL MINE. A mine served by one carrier. 265 U. S. 534. See JOINT MINE; RATING (Supp.).

LOCALITY. Within the Meaning of Oklahoma Comp. Stats. 1921, Sections 7255, 7257, imposing punishments upon contractors with the state who pay their workmen less than the "current of per diem wages in the locality where the work is performed." The meaning of the word "locality" is obscure. Who can say, with any degree of accuracy, what areas constitute the locality where a given piece of work is being done? In 205 Pac. 779 the court defined the word "locality" as meaning "place," "near the place," "vicinity," or "neighborhood." Accepting this as correct, the result is not to remove the obscurity, but rather to offer a choice of uncertainties. The word "neighborhood" is quite as susceptible of variation as the word "locality." Both terms are elastic, and, dependent upon circumstances, may be equally satisfied by areas measured by rods or by miles. Id., 395; 90 Mo. 296; 38 Iowa 485; 26 Wash. 407; 408; 75 N. J. Law 412; 10 Pick. 367. Further, the expression "near the place" leaves much to be desired in the way of a delimitation of boundaries; for it at once provokes the inquiry, "how near?" Id.

LOCKMAN. An officer in the Isle of Man who executed the orders of the government. English.

LOCMAN. In French Law. A pilot. English.

LOCUPLES. In Civil Law. Able to respond in an action; good for the amount which the plaintiff might recover. Dig. 50, 16, 234.1. Burrill.

LOGIC. (Greek). The science of the operations of the understanding which are subservient to the estimation of evidence; both the process itself of proceeding from known truths to unknown, and all other intellectual operations, in so far as auxiliary to this. 1 Mill Log; Whately Log. R. & L.

LOGOGRAPHUS. In Roman Law. A public clerk, register, or bookkeeper; one who wrote or kept books of accounts. Dig. 50, 4, 18, 10. Burrill.

LOLLARDS. Founders of the Protestant religion in England. Originated about the year 1315, and from that time were called heretics, and statutes were passed to suppress them. English.

LOMBARDS. Merchants of Italy who established themselves in European cities during the 12th and 13th centuries. English.

LOP WOOD. A right in the inhabitants of a parish within a manor, in England, to lop for fuel, at certain periods of the year, the branches of trees growing upon the waste lands of the manor. Willingale vs. Maitland, L. R. 3 Eq. 103. R. & L.

LOSS CLAIMS RESERVE. See RE-SERVE FUNDS (Supp.).

LOVE-DAY. In Old English Law. The day on which neighbors settled a dispute, or on which one helped the other without reward. English.

LOW JUSTICE. In Old European Law. Jurisdiction of petty offences, as distinguished from high justice. Burrill.

LUCRATIVA CAUSA. A consideration which is voluntary, that is to say, a gratuitous gift, or such like. Brown; R. & L.

LUCRATIVA USUCAPIO. The species of usucapio permitted in Roman law only in case of persons taking possession of property upon the decease of the late owner, and in exclusion or deforcement of the heir. Brown; R. & L.

LUNDRESS. In Old English Law. A silver penny, so called because it was to be coined only at London. Lowndes' Essay on Coins, 17. Burrill.

LURGULARY. Casting any corrupt or poisonous thing into the water. R. & L.

LYCH-GATE. The gate into a church-yard, with a roof or awning hung on posts over it to cover the body brought for burial, when it rests underneath. Wharton; R. & L.

LYING BY. Acquiescence. See ESTOPPEL; LACHES.

LYING IN FRANCHISE. Waifs, wrecks, estrays, and the like, which may be seized without suit or action. 3 Steph. Com. (7 Edit.) 258. R. & L.

LYNDHURST'S (LORD) ACT. Statute (5 & 6 Will. IV, c. 54) renders marriages within the prohibited degrees absolutely null and void; therefore such marriages were voidable merely. R. & L.

LYTTELTON, LITTLETON. The author of Littleton's Tenures, made famous by Lord Coke and during the reign of Edward IV. English.

MACHINE. A machine is a concrete thing consisting of parts, or of certain devices and combination of devices. The principle of a machine is properly defined to be its mode of operation, or that peculiar combination of devices which distinguishes it from other machines. 170 U. S. 556, quoting 1 Wall. 570. A machine is not a principle or an idea. Id.

MACHOLUM. In Old English Law. A barn or granary open at the top. Spelman; Burrill.

MACULARE. In Old European Law. To wound. L. Alam. tit. 61, §1. Burrill.

MAD POINT. See MONOMANIA.

MADDER. A plant of the genus of Rupia, the stealing or destruction of which was severely punished in England. It was also liable to predial tithe. English.

MADRAS REGULATIONS. Certain regulations prescribed for the government of the Madras presidency. Mozley & W.; Abbott.

MAGISTRATE. A public civil officer, possessing such power, legislative, executive, or judicial, as the government appointing him may ordain. 214 U. S. 7. The appellation of magistrate is not confined to justices of the peace, and other persons, ex officio generis, who exercise general judicial powers; but it includes others whose duties are strictly executive. Id., Anderson's Dictionary of Law. A person clothed with power as a public civil officer. Id., 1 Black. Com. 146.

MAINE-PORT. A small tribute. Commonly of loaves of bread, which in some places the parishioners paid to the rector in lieu of small tithes. Cowell; R. & L.

MAINTENANCE CHARGE. See CONSTRUCTION CHARGE (Supp.).

MAIRE. In Old Scotch Law. An officer who served process and to whom they were directed. English.

MAIRIE. In French Law. The public building of a commune where public records are kept. English.

MAJOR ANNUS (Lat.). The greater year; the bissextile year, consisting of 366 days. Bract. fol. 359b. Burrill.

MAL GREE (L. Fr.). Against the will; without the consent. Britt. c. 41. Hence, the single word malgre and more modern maigre. Burrill.

MALE CREDITUS (L. Lat.). In Old English Law. Unfavorably thought of; in bad repute or credit. Bract. fol. 116, 154. Burrill.

MALFETRIA. In Spanish Law. Offence. White's New Recop. b. 2. tit. 19, c. 1, §1. Burrill.

MALINGERING. A military term applied to soldiers who pretend to be sick in order to escape duty. English.

MALO SENSU. In a bad sense; with an evil meaning. English.

MALVEISA. A warlike engine to batter and beat down walls. R. & L.

MANAGING OWNER OF SHIP. One of several co-owners, to whom the others who join in the adventure have delegated the management of the ship. Coullthurst vs. Sweet, L. R., 1 c. p. 649. See SHIP'S HUSBAND.

MANAGIUM. A mansion house or dwelling place. Cowell; R. & L.

MANCA, MANCUS, or MANCUSA. A square piece of gold coin, commonly valued at thirty pence. Cowell; R. & L.

MANCIPI RES. In Roman Law. Things which could only be transferred by mancipation or fictitious sale and payment. English.

MANCIPLE. A clerk of the kitchen, or caterer, especially in colleges. Cowell; R. & L.

MANDAMIENTO. In Spanish Law. Commission; authority or power of attorney. A contract of good faith, by which one person commits to the gratuitous charge of another, his affairs, and latter accepts. White's New Recop. b. 2, tit. 12, c. 1. Burrill.

MANDAMUS. An extraordinary remedial process which is awarded, not as a matter of right, but in the exercise of a sound judicial discretion. It issues to remedy a wrong, not to promote one; to compel the performance of a duty which ought to be performed, not to direct an act which will work a public or private mischief or will be within the strict letter of the law but in disregard of its spirit. Although classed as a legal remedy, its issuance is largely controlled by equitable principles. 245 U. S. 311, 312; 222 U. S. 204; 137 N. Y. 201; 139 N. Y. 14; 49 Pa. St. 530; 147 Mich. 184; 39 App. D. C. 181.

Mandamus issues to compel an officer to perform a purely ministerial duty. It cannot be used to compel or control a duty in the discharge of which by law he is given discretion. The duty may be discretionary within limits. He cannot transgress those limits, and if he does so, he may be controlled by injunction or mandamus to keep within them. The power of the court to intervene, if at all, thus depends upon what statutory discretion he has. Under some statutes, the discretion extends to a final construction by the officer of the statute he is executing. No court in such a case can control by mandamus his interpretation, even if it may think it erroneous. The cases range, therefore, from wide discretion to cases where the duty is purely ministerial, where the officer can do only one thing, which on refusal he may be compelled to do. 267 U. S. 177.

MANDATAIRE. In French Law. A person employed by another to do some act for him; a mandatory. Pothier, Tr. de Mandat, art. prel. n. 1. Burrill.

MANDATO, PANES DE. Ancient expression for loaves of bread given to the poor on Maundy Thursday. English.

MANGONARE. To buy in the market. English.

MANGONELLUS. An ancient device for throwing stones against castle walls. English.

MANIPULUS. A handkerchief which a priest always had in his left hand. Blount; R. & L.

MANRENT. In Scotch Law. By which one obtained by agreement the protection of a lord in return for certain services. English.

MANSER. A bastard. Cowell; R. & L.

MANSTEALING. See KIDNAPPING.

MANSUETUS. Tame; domesticated. English.

MANUALIA BENEFICIA. Daily distributions of meat and drink to those who officiated in the churches, for their sustenance. English.

MANUFACTURE. Manufacture implies a change, but every change is not manufacture, and yet every change in an article is the result of treatment, labor, and manipulation. But something more is necessary. (121 U. S. 609.) There must be transformation; a new and different article must emerge, "having a distinctive name, character, or use." 207 U. S. 562.

MANUPES. A foot of full and legal measure. R. & L.

MANURABLE. Admitting of tillage.

MARA. A mere, lake, or great pond that cannot be drawn dry. Par. Antiq. 418; Mon. Ang. Tom. 1, p. 666. R. & L.

MARINE INSURANCE. See SEA-WORTHY (Supp.).

MARINER. See SEAMAN (Supp.).

MARINES. A military force drilled as infantry, whose especial province is to serve on board ships of war when in commission. R. & L.

MARITIME TORT. An injury suffered by a workman while repairing a completed vessel afloat in navigable waters, and due to the negligence of his employer, is a maritime tort. 266 U. S. 457. In such cases the rights and liabilities of the parties arise out of and depend upon the maritime law and cannot be enlarged or impaired by state statute. Id.

MARTE SUO DECURRERE. To run by its own force.

In the Civil Law. A term applied to a suit which had proceeded to final judgment without interruption. English.

MARTINMAS. The feast of St. Martin of Tours, on the 11th of November. It is the third of the four cross quarter days of the year. Wharton; R. & L.

MASSA. In Civil Law. A mass of substance not formed into any article.

MASSACHUSETTS RULE. A rule of liability in which a bank which receives commercial paper for collection is liable only for its failure to exercise due care in the selection of an agent to make the collection. (Compare NEW YORK RULE, Supp.) Under the Massachusetts rule the agent selected becomes the agent of the owner of the paper, who may maintain an action directly against it for the negligent performance of its undertaking. 271 U. S. 491; 264 U. S. 164; 1 Pet. 25.

MASSACHUSETTS TRUST. A form of business organization, common in Massachusetts, consisting essentially of an arrangement whereby property is conveyed to trustees, in accordance with the terms of an instrument of trust, to be held and managed for the benefit of such persons as may from time to time be the holders of transferable certificates issued by the trustees showing the shares into which the beneficial interest in the property is divided. These certificates, which resemble certificates for shares of stock in a corporation and are issued and transferred in like manner, entitle the holders to share ratably in the income of the property, and, upon termination of the trust, in the proceeds. 265 U. S. 146, 147. Under the Massachusetts decisions these trust instruments are held to create either pure trusts or partnerships, according to the way in which the trustees are to conduct the affairs committed to their charge. If they are the principals and are free from the control of the certificate holders in the management of the property, a trust is created; but if the certificate holders are associated together in the control of the property as principals and the trustees are merely their managing agents, a partnership relation between the certificate holders is created. Id.; 215 Mass. 6; 219 Mass. 365; 227 Mass. 565; 230 Mass. 455.

These trusts—whether pure trusts or partnerships—are unincorporated. They are not organized under any statute; and they derive no power, benefit, or privilege from any statute. The Massachusetts statutes, however, recognize their existence and impose upon them, as "associations," certain obligations and liabilities. Id. (Such trusts also exist in other states. See generally, as to their characteristics, Sears' Trust Estates as Business Companies, and Wrightington's Unincorporated Associations.) See ASSOCIATION; CORPORATION; PARTNERSHIP.

MAST. To fatten with mast; the fruit of the oak, beech, and other forest trees; the upright piece in a ship which sustains the yards and sails. English.

MASTSELLING. In Old English Law. Selling the effects of deceased seamen at the mast of the ship.

MASURA. In Old Records. A decayed house; a wall; the ruins of a building; a certain quantity of land, about four oxgangs. R. & L.

MATCHING. A method by which contracts are settled by offsetting purchases against sales. 263 U. S. 616. See DIRECT SETTLEMENT; KING SETTLEMENT; WASH SALES (Supp.).

MATERIAL. Within the Meaning of the Act of June 15, 1917, c. 29, 40 Stat. 182, empowering the president, within the limits of amounts appropriated, "to modify, suspend, cancel, or requisition any existing or future contract for the building, production, or purchase of ships or material." Includes stores, supplies, and equipment for ships and everything required for or in connection with the production thereof. 261 U. S. 518. Held the word "material" included anti-aircraft gun-mounts for the navy. Id.

Material. adj. Important; as applied to the evidence offered in a cause, or facts drawn in question in a proceeding, it means much the same as relevant. Abbott.

MATTRESS. Within the Meaning of an Act of the Legislature of Pennsylvania, Approved June 14, 1923, regulating the manufacture, sterilization, and sale of bedding. "Mattress" means any quilted pad, mattress, mattress pad, mattress protector, bunk quilt, or box spring, stuffed or filled with excelsior, straw, hay, grass, corn husks, moss fiber, cotton, wool, hair, jute, kapok, or other soft material. 270 U. S. 408, 409. See COMFORTABLE; CUSHION; NEW; PILLOW; SHODDY (Supp.).

MAUNDY THURSDAY. The day preceding Good Friday, on which princes gave alms. R. & L.

MAYNOVER. Something produced by hand. English.

MEAD. See MEADOW.

MEAN. See MESNE.

MEASURER or METER. An officer in the city of London, who measured woollen clothes, coats, etc. R. & L. See ALNAGER.

MEASURING MONEY. In Old English Law. A privilege anciently granted by letters patent of exacting money for every cloth made within a certain locality. English.

MECHANICAL INSTRUMENT. See COPY; PERFORATED ROLL (Supp.).

MEDFEE. In Old English Law. A bribe; compensation to make up for the inequality in an exchange. English.

MEDSYPP. A supper given harvesters at harvesting time. English.

MEINY, MEINE, or MEINIE. The royal household; a retinue. R. & L.

MELIOR. Better. Bract. fol. 60. Burrill.

MEMORIAL. Anything intended to preserve the memory of a person or event; something which serves to keep some person or thing in remembrance, as a monument or a practice. Web. New Int. Dict.

MENSALIA. In Old English Church Law. Livings connected with religious houses. English.

MENSIS. In Civil and Old English Law. A month. Dig. 50, 17, 101. Burrill.

MENSOR. In Civil Law. A measurer of land; a surveyor. Dig. 11, 6. Burrill.

MER. A syllable at the beginning of ending a word signifying fenny, watery places. English.

MERCHANT VESSEL. Under the Commercial and Navigation Laws of the United States. Merchant vessels are divisible into two classes: First, vessels registered pursuant to Rev. Stat., sec. 4131. These must be wholly owned, commanded, and officered by citizens of the United States, and are alone entitled to engage in foreign trade; and, second, vessels enrolled and licensed for the coasting trade or fisheries. Rev. Stat., sec. 4311. These may not engage in foreign trade under penalty of forfeiture. (Section 4337.) This class of vessel is also engaged in navigation upon the Great Lakes and the interior waters of the country—in other words, they are engaged in domestic instead of foreign trade. 182 U. S. 395.

The words "coasting trade," as distinguishing this class of vessel, seem to have been selected because at that time all the domestic commerce of the country was either interior commerce, or coastwise, between ports upon the Atlantic or Pacific coasts, or upon islands so near thereto, and belonging to the several states, as properly to constitute a part of the coast. Strictly speaking Porto Rico is not such an island, as it is not only situated some hundreds of miles from the nearest port on the Atlantic coast, but had never belonged to the United States, or any of the states composing the Union. At the same time trade with that island is properly a part of the domestic trade of the country since the treaty of annexation, and is so recognized by the Porto Rican or Foraker Act. Id., 396.

MERIDIES. In Old English Law. Noon. Fleta, lib. 5, c. 5, § 31. Burrill.

META. A butt; a boundary line. English.

METACHRONISM. A mistake in computing time. English.

METAL. See EXPANDED METAL (Supp.).

METECORN. A measure or portion of corn, given by a lord to customary tenants as a reward and encouragement for labor. Cowell; R. & L.

MIDSUMMER-DAY. June 24th; in England one of the quarter days. English.

MILLBANK PRISON. In England, a prison at Westminster, used for the keeping of convicts sentenced to transportation. English. 5 & 6 Vict. c. 98; 6 & 7 Vict. c. 26.

MINE. See LOCAL MINE; JOINT MINE; PROPERTY (Supp.).

MINERAL OIL. See PETROLEUM (Supp.).

MINERAL SURVEYOR OF THE UNITED STATES. Surveyors appointed by the surveyor general under Rev. Stat., section 2334, whose field of action is confined to the surveying of mining claims and to matters incident thereto. They act only at the solicitation of owners of such claims, and are paid by the owners, not by the government; but their charges must be within the maximum fixed by the commissioner of the General Land Office, and their work must be done in conformity to regulations prescribed by that officer. They are required to take an oath, and to execute a bond to the United States, as are many public officers. Within the limits of their authority they act in the stead of the surveyor general and under his direction, and in that sense are his deputies. The work which they do is the work of the government, and the surveys which they make are its surveys. The right performance of their duties is of real concern, not merely to those at whose solicitation they act, but also to the owners of adjacent and conflicting claims and to the government. Of the representatives of the government who have to do with the proceedings incident to applications for patents to mining claims, they alone come in contact with the land itself, and have an opportunity to observe its situation and character, and the extent and nature of the work done and improvements made thereon; and it is upon their reports that the surveyor general makes the certificate required by Rev. Stat., section 2325, which is a prerequisite to the issuance of a patent. 223 U. S. 92.

MINING. See ANNUAL ASSESSMENT LABOR; INTERSTATE COMMERCE; MINERAL SURVEYOR OF THE UNITED STATES (Supp.).

MINING LANDS. See PETROLEUM (Supp.).

MINISTRANT. Anciently, one who cross-examined a witness in an ecclesiastical court. English.

MINISTRI REGIS. In Old English Law. Ministers of the king; all ministerial officers, also judges of the kingdom. English. 2 Inst. 208.

MINUTIO. In Civil Law. A lessening; diminution or reduction. Dig. 4, 5, 1. Burrill.

MISBRANDED. Within the Meaning of Section 8 of the Food and Drugs Act. Applies to all articles of food, or articles which enter into the composition of food, the package or label of which shall bear any statement, design, or device regarding such article, or the ingredients or substances contained therein, which shall be false or misleading in any particular. 265 U. S. 442. For the purposes of the Food and Drugs Act, an article shall be deemed to be misbranded: In the case of food: First, if it be an imitation of or offered for sale under the distinctive name of another article. Second, if it be labeled or branded so as to deceive or mislead the purchaser, or purport to be a foreign product when not so, or if the contents of the package as originally put up shall have been removed in whole or in part and other contents shall have been placed in such package, or if it fail to bear a statement on the label of the quantity or proportion of any morphine, opium, cocaine, heroin, alpha or beta eucaine, chloroform, cannabis indica, chloral hydrate, or acetanilide, or any derivative or preparation of any of such substances contained therein. Third, if in package form, and the contents are stated in terms of weight or measure, they are not plainly and correctly stated on the outside of the package. Fourth, if the package containing it or its label shall bear any statement, design, or device regarding the ingredients or the substances contained therein, which statement, design, or device shall be false or misleading in any particular. Id. See also 241 U. S. 275, footnote, and 239 U. S. 513.

Deception may result from the use of statements not technically false or which may be literally true. 265 U. S. 443; 246 U. S. 522; 232 U. S. 409; 231 U. S. 665.

If an article is not the identical thing that the brand indicates it to be, it is misbranded. Id., 444.

MISDELIVERY. See DAMAGE IN TRANSIT (Supp.).

MISSA. (Lat.) The mass.

MITOYENNETE. In French Law. Joint ownership of two landowners in that which separates their land, as a fence, hedge, or ditch. English.

MOCKADOES. A kind of cloth made in England, mentioned in Stat. 23 Eliz. c. 9. R. & L.

MODIFICATION. See ALTER; ALTERATION.

MOIDORE. A gold coin of Portugal, value twenty-seven English shillings. R. & L.

MOLENDUM. A quantity of corn sent to a mill for grinding. English.

MOMENTUM. In Civil Law. An instant; an indivisible portion of time. Calvin.

A portion of time that might be measured, a division or subdivision of an hour, answering in some degree to the modern minute, but of longer duration. Bract. fol. 264, 359b, Burrill.

MONACHISM. The condition or state of a monk. English.

MONOMACHY. A duel; a single combat. R. & L. See WAGER OF BATTLE.

MONOPOLY. Conception According to English Law. As defined by Lord Coke, "A monopoly is an institution, or allowance by the king by his grant, commission, or otherwise to any person or persons, bodies politic or corporate, of or for the sole buying, selling, making, working, or using of anything, whereby any person or persons, bodies politic or corporate, are sought to be restrained of any freedom or liberty that they had before, or hindered in their lawful trade." 3 Inst. 181, c. 85; 221 U. S. 51. As defined by Hawkins: "A monopoly is an allowance by the king to a particular person or persons of the sole buying, selling, making, working, or using of anything whereby the subject in general is restrained from the freedom of manufacturing or trading which he had before." Hawk. P. C. bk. 1, c. 29; Id., 52.

The evils which led to the public outcry against monopolies and to the final denial of the power to make them were: (1) The power which the monopoly gave to the one who enjoyed it to fix the price and thereby injure the public; (2) the power which it engendered of enabling the limitation on production; and, (3) the danger of deterioration in quality of the monopolized article which it was deemed was the inevitable result of the monopolistic control over its production and sale. As monopoly as thus conceived embraced only a consequence arising from an exertion of sovereign power, no express restrictions or prohibitions obtained against the creation by an individual of a monopoly as such. But as it was considered, at least so far as the necessities of life were concerned, that individuals by the abuse of their right to contract might be able to usurp the power arbitrarily to enhance prices, one of the wrongs arising from monopoly, it came to be that laws were passed relating to offences such as forestalling, regrating, and engrossing by which prohibitions were placed upon the power of individuals to deal under such circumstances and conditions as, according to the conception of the times, created a presumption that the dealings were not simply the honest exertion of one's right to contract for his own benefit unaccompanied by a wrongful motive to injure others, but were the consequence of a contract or course of dealing of such a character as to give rise to the presumption of an intent to injure others through the means, for instance, of a monopolistic increase of price.

As by the statutes providing against engrossing the quantity engrossed was not required to be the whole or a proximate part of the whole of an article, it is clear that there was a wide difference between monopoly and engrossing, etc. But as the principal wrong which it was deemed would result from monopoly, that is, an enhancement of the price, was the same wrong to which it was thought the prohibited engrossment would give rise, it came to pass that monopoly and engrossing were regarded as virtually one and the same thing. In other words, the prohibited act of engrossing, because of its inevitable accomplishment of one of the evils deemed to be engendered by monopoly, came to be referred to as being a monopoly or constituting an attempt to monopolize. Id., 53.

And by operation of the mental process which led to considering as a monopoly acts which although they did not constitute a monopoly were thought to produce some of its baneful effects, so also because of the impediment or burden to the due course of trade which they produced, such acts came to be referred to as in restraint of trade. Id., 54.

Generalizing these considerations, the situation is this: (1) That by the common law monopolies were unlawful because of their restriction upon individual freedom of contract and their injury to the public. (2) That as to necessities of life the freedom of the individual to deal was restricted where the nature and character of the dealing was such as to engender the presumption of intent to bring about at least one of the injuries which it was deemed would result from monopoly; that is, an undue enhancement of price. (3) That to protect the freedom of contract of the individual not only in his own interest, but principally in the interest of the common weal, a contract of an individual by which he put an unreasonable restraint upon himself as to carrying on his trade or business was void. And that at common law the evils consequent upon engrossing, etc., caused those things to be treated as coming within monopoly and sometimes to be called monopoly, and the same considerations caused monopoly, because of its operation and effect, to be brought within and spoken of generally as impeding the due course of or being in restraint of trade. Id., 53, 54.

From the review just made it results that outside of the restrictions resulting from the want of power in an individual to voluntarily and unreasonably restrain his right to carry on his trade or business, and outside of the want or right to restrain the free course of trade by contracts or acts which implied a wrongful purpose, freedom to contract and to abstain from contracting and to exercise every reasonable right incident thereto became the rule in the English law.

Conception According to United States Law. In the United States also the acts from which it was deemed there resulted a part if not all of the injurious consequences ascribed to monopoly came to be referred to as a monopoly itself. In other words, here as had been the case in England, practical common sense caused attention to be concentrated not upon the theoretically correct name to be given to the condition or acts which gave rise to a harmful result, but to the result itself and to the remedying of the evils which it produced. 221 U. S. 56.

It is also true that while the principles concerning contracts in restraint of trade, that is, voluntary restraint put by a person on his right to pursue his calling, hence only operating subjectively, came generally to be recognized in accordance with the English rule, it came moreover to pass that contracts or acts which it was considered had a monopolistic tendency, especially those which were thought to unduly diminish competition and hence to enhance prices—in other words, to monopolize—came also in a generic sense to be spoken of and treated as they had been in England, as restricting the due course of trade, and therefore as being in restraint of trade. The dread of monopoly as an emanation of governmental power, while it passed at an early date out of mind in this country, as a result of the structure of our government, did not serve to assuage the fear as to the evil consequences which might arise from the acts of individuals producing or tending to produce the consequences of monopoly. It resulted that treating such acts as amounting to monopoly, sometimes constitutional restrictions, again legislative enactments or judicial decisions, served to enforce and illustrate the purpose to prevent the occurrence of the evils recognized in the mother country as consequent upon monopoly by providing against contracts or acts of individuals or combinations of individuals or corporations deemed to be conducive to such results.

It will be found that as modern conditions arose the trend of legislation and judicial decision came more and more to adapt the recognized restrictions to new manifestations of conduct or of dealing which it was thought justified the inference of intent to do the wrongs which it had been the purpose to prevent from the beginning. Surveying the whole field it may be said that the dread of enhancement of prices and of other wrongs which it was thought would flow from the undue limitation on competitive conditions caused by contracts or other acts of individuals or corporations, led, as a matter of public policy, to the prohibition or treating as illegal all contracts or acts which were unreasonably restrictive of competitive conditions, either from the nature or character of the contract or act or where the surrounding circumstances were such as to justify the conclusion that they had not been entered into or performed with the legitimate purpose of reasonably forwarding personal interest and developing trade, but on the contrary were of such a character as to give rise to the inference or presumption that they had been entered into or done with the intent to do wrong to the general public and to limit the right of individuals, thus restraining the free flow of commerce and tending to bring about the evils, such as enhancement of prices, which were considered to be against public policy. It is equally true to say that the survey of the legislation in this country on this subject from the beginning will show, depending as it did upon the economic conceptions which obtained at the time when the legislation was adopted or judicial decision was rendered, that contracts or acts were at one time deemed to be of such a character as to justify the inference of wrongful intent which were at another period thought not to be of that character. But this again followed the line of development of the law of England (above). Id., 58, 59.

Within the Meaning of Section 2 of the Sherman Act. Undoubtedly, the words "to monopolize" and "monopolize" as used in this section reach every act bringing about the prohibited results. The ambiguity, if any, is involved in determining what is intended by monopolize. But this ambiguity is readily dispelled in the light of the previous history of the law of restraint of trade, referred to above, and the indication which it gives of the practical evolution by which monopoly and the acts which produce the same result as monopoly, that is, an undue restraint of the course of trade, all came to be spoken of as, and to be indeed synonymous with, restraint of trade. Id., 61.

That an industrial combination if formed with the expectation of achieving a monopoly is not enough to make it a monopoly within the meaning of the Anti-Trust Act. 251 U. S. 444.

MONYA. See MONETAGIUM.

MOOE, MOOR. An officer in the Isle of Man who summons the courts for the several shreadings; office similar to the English bailiff of a hundred. R. & L.

MORBUS SONTICUS. In Civil Law. Such a sickness as prevented one from transacting business matters. English.

MORE COLONICO. In Old English Law. In a husband-like manner. English.

MORT CIVILE. In French Law. Civil death. English.

MORTGAGE. See CONDITIONAL SALE (Supp.).

MOST RECENTLY ACCUMULATED UNDIVIDED PROFITS OR SURPLUS. See SURPLUS (Supp.).

MOTION. When speaking of trains in motion, the word "motion" refers generally to the continuous movement of the cars towards their destination. 170 U. S. 535.

MULTO. In Old English. Term for a wether sheep. English.

MUNDIUM. In Old French Law. A tribute paid by a church or monastery to their seignorial avoues and videntes, as the price of protecting them. Steph. Lect. 236. Burrill.

MUNICIPALITY. A governmental agency. Its functions are for the public good, and the powers given to it and to be exercised by it must be construed with reference to that good and to the distinctions which are recognized as important in the administration of public affairs. 171 U. S. 55. See CITY; TOWN (Supp.).

MUSEUM. A place where a collection of curiosities is kept. English.

MUSH CONCRETE. Wet concrete, q. v. 269 U. S. 179.

MUSICAL COMPOSITION. An intellectual creation which first exists in the mind of the composer. 209 U. S. 17. See COPY; PERFORATED ROLL (Supp.).

MUSICAL INSTRUMENT. See COPY; MUSICAL COMPOSITION; PERFORATED ROLL (Supp.).

MUSSA. A moss or marsh ground; or a place where sedges grow; a place overrun with moss. Cowell; R. & L.

MUTUAL, LEVEL PREMIUM PLAN. A plan under which an insurance company issues both "annual dividend" and "deferred dividend" policies. Under this plan each policyholder pays annually in advance a fixed sum which, when added to like payments by others, probably will create a fund larger than necessary to meet all maturing policies and estimated expenses. At the end of each year the actual insurance costs and expenses incurred are ascertained. The difference between their sum and the total of advance payments and other income, then becomes the "overpayment" or surplus fund for immediate pro rata distribution among policyholders as dividends or for such future disposition as the contracts provide. An "annual dividend" policyholder receives his proportionate part of this fund each year in cash or as a credit upon or abatement of his next premium. "Deferred dividend" or, as sometimes called, "distribution" policies provide—

"That no dividend or surplus shall be allowed or paid upon this policy, unless the insured shall survive until completion of its distribution period, and unless this policy shall then be in force. That surplus or profits derived from such policies on the distribution policy plan as shall not be in force at the date of the completion of their respective distribution periods, shall be apportioned among such policies as shall complete the distribution periods."

Accordingly, all overpayments by deferred dividend policyholders must await apportionment until the prescribed period ends; and no one of them will receive anything therefrom if his policy lapses or if he dies before that time. The whole of this fund goes to the survivors. 271 U. S. 115, 116.

MUTUS ET SURDUS. Dumb and deaf. R. & L.

MYNSTER-HAM. Monastic habitation; perhaps the part of a monastery set apart for purposes of hospitality, or as a sanctuary for criminals. Anc. Inst. Eng. R. & L.

NAMARE (L. Lat.). In Old Records. To take; to distract; to take a distress. Burrill.

NAME. See TRADE NAME (Supp.).

NANTES, EDICT OF. A law made by Henry IV. of France for the protection of Protestants; revoked by Louis XIV. on October 2, 1685. English.

NAPHTHA. The first distillation of crude oil takes off the elements more volatile than kerosene, and these taken together are known as the "naphtha fraction." After treatment with sulphuric acid, this fraction is divided by further distillation into three products—gasoline, the lightest; benzine, the intermediate, and naphtha, which is called "painter's naphtha," the heaviest. The gravity of such naphtha is around 54 degrees (Baume). 268 U. S. 547. See CASINGHEAD GASOLINE (Supp.).

"Naphtha" is a generic term and embraces the lighter or more volatile parts of crude oil down to and sometimes including kerosene. This takes in all the elements of finished gasoline. The words "naphtha" and "gasoline" are often used interchangeably to include the unfinished product of which the gasoline of commerce is made. Id., 551.

The processes for refining crude oil in the production of gasoline include the separation and combining of various elements of the crude product, and are not limited to the elimination of impurities. Id.

NARCOTIC. See TO A PATIENT (Supp.).

NATI ET NASCITURI. Born and to be born; present and possible heirs. English.

NATION. See TRIBE (Supp.).

NATIONAL BANKING ASSOCIATION. See FEDERAL RESERVE BANKS (Supp.).

NATIONAL BANKS. These are not merely private moneyed institutions, but agencies of the United States created under its laws to promote its fiscal policies. Hence, the banks, their property, and their shares cannot be taxed under state authority except as congress consents and then only in conformity with the restrictions attached to its consent. 269 U. S. 347; 263 U. S. 106. See MONEYED CAPITAL (Supp.).

National banks are brought into existence under federal legislation, are instrumentalities of the federal government, and are necessarily subject to the paramount authority of the United States. Nevertheless, national banks are subject to the laws of a state in respect of their affairs unless such laws interfere with the purposes of their creation, tend to impair or destroy their efficiency as federal agencies, or conflict with the paramount law of the United States. 263 U. NE QUID IN LOCO PUBLICO VEL ITINERE FIAT. That nothing shall be done (put or erected) in a public place or way. The title of an interdiction in the Roman law. Dig. 43, 8. Burrill.

NE RECTOR PROSTERNET ARBORES. Stat. 25 Edw. I. prohibiting parsons from cutting trees in churchyards. Subsequently construed to extend to opening mines and taking the mineral therefrom. English.

NEAR THE PLACE. See LOCALITY (Supp.).

NECESSARY PARTIES. Parties are necessary who have such an interest in the matter in controversy that it cannot be determined without affecting that interest or leaving the interests of those who are before the court in a situation that might be embarrassing or inconsistent with equity. 266 U. S. 159; 17 How. 139.

NECESSITUDO (Lat.). In the Civil Law. An obligation; a close connection; relationship by blood. Calv. Lex. Burrill.

NEFASTUS (Lat.). In Roman Law. A term applied to a day on which it was unlawful to administer justice. Adam's Rom. Ant. 129, 200. Burrill.

NEGLECTANCE. Consists in conduct which common experience or the special knowledge of the actor shows to be so likely to produce the result complained of, under the circumstances known to the actor, that he is held answerable for that result, although it was not certain, intended, or foreseen. 205 U. S. 12.

Distinguished from Assumption of Risk. The practical difference of the two ideas of negligence and assumption of risk is in the degree of their proximity to the particular harm. The preliminary conduct of getting into the dangerous employment or relation is said to be accompanied by assumption of the risk. The act more immediately leading to a specific accident is called negligence. But the difference between the two is one of degree rather than of kind. Id. When a statute exonerates a servant from assumption of risk, if at the same time it leaves the defense of contributory negligence still open to the master, then, unless great care be taken, the servant's rights will be sacrificed by simply charging him with assumption of the risk under another name. Id., 12, 13.

While assumption of risk sometimes shades into negligence as commonly understood, there is, nevertheless a practical and clear distinction between the two. In the absence of statute taking away the defense, or such obvious dangers that no ordinarily prudent person would incur them, an employee is held to assume the risk of the ordinary dangers of the occupation into which he is about to enter, and also those risks and dangers which are known, or are so plainly observable that the employee may be presumed to know of them, and if he continues in the master's employ without objection, he takes upon himself the risk of injury from such defects. 191 U. S. 67, 68. Contributory negligence, on the other hand, is the omission of the employee to use those precautions for his own safety which ordinary prudence requires. 37 C. C. A. 506; 220 U. S. 596.

OFFA EXECRATA. "The execrable mouthful." A Saxon method of trial by which the accused was forced to swallow a mouthful of bread. If it did not choke him, he was innocent. English. 1 Reeve's Hist. 21.

OFFENCES AGAINST THE UNITED STATES. Within the Meaning of Article II, Section 2, Cl. 1 of the Constitution. In the pardon clause, includes criminal contempts. 267 U. S. 108.

History of the Pardon Clause in the Constitutional Convention of 1787. The proceedings of the convention from June 19, 1787, to July 23rd, were by resolution referred to a Committee on Detail for report of the constitution (II Farrand's Records of Constitutional Convention, 123, 129) and contained the following (II Farrand, 146): "The power of pardoning vested in the executive (which) his pardon shall not; however, be pleadable to an impeachment." On August 6th, Mr. Rutledge of the Committee on Detail (II Farrand, 185) reported the provision as follows: "He shall have power to grant reprieves and pardons; but his pardon shall not be pleadable in bar of impeachment." This is exactly what the king's pardon was at common law with the same limitation (IV Blackstone, 399). On August 25th (II Farrand, 411), the words "except in cases of impeachment" were added after "pardons" and the succeeding words were stricken out. On Saturday, September 8th (II Farrand, 547), a committee of five to revise the style of and arrange the articles was agreed to by the house. As referred to the Committee on Style, the clause read (II Farrand, 575): "He shall have power to grant reprieves and pardons except in cases of impeachment." The Committee on Style reported this clause as it now is: "and he shall have power to grant reprieves and pardons for offences against the United States except in cases of impeachment." There seems to have been no discussion over the substance of the clause save that a motion to except cases of treason was referred to the Committee on Style. September 10th (II Farrand, 564), was not approved by the committee and after discussion was defeated in the convention September 15th (II Farrand, 626, 627).

This history of the clause shows that the words "for offences against the United States" were inserted by a Committee on Style, presumably to make clear that the pardon of the president was to operate upon offences against the United States as distinguished from offences against the states. It cannot be supposed that the Committee on Revision by adding these words, or the convention by accepting them, intended sub silentio to narrow the scope of a pardon from one at common law or to confer any different power in this regard on our executive from that which the members of the convention had seen exercised before the revolution. 267 U. S. 112, 113. See PARDON, POWER OF (Supp.).

OFFERTORIUM. The offerings of the faithful; of the place where they are made or kept; the service at the time of communion. R. & L.

OFFICE. A public station conferred by the appointment of government. The term embraces the idea of tenure, duration, emolument, and duties fixed by law. Where an office is created, the law usually fixes its incidents, including its term, its duties, and its compensation. 269 U. S. 520; 103 U. S. 5; 6 Wall. 385.

ONE-MAN CAR. A car operated by one motorman instead of by two men. The car is usually so arranged that passengers enter and leave it only by the front end, where the motorman is placed. 251 U. S. 170.

OPE CONSILIO. In Civil Law. By aid and counsel. A term applied to accessories in the commission of crimes of import similar to the "aiding and abetting" in the common law. Inst. 4, 1, 11, 12; Dig. 50, 16, 53, 2. Burrill.

OPEN SHOP. See AMERICAN PLAN (Supp.).

OPENTIDE. The time after corn is taken from the fields. English.

OPERATING AGAINST AN ENEMY. Within the Meaning of Section 7 of the Act of Congress of April 26, 1898. An army officer was not "serving with troops operating against an enemy," while exercising a command in a camp of instruction in the United States during the war of 1917-1918 in Europe. 265 U. S. 166.

"There is within our borders no enemy, within the meaning of the law, for troops to operate against. An army has been called together, and is being drilled, but until that army embarks for a foreign country, or until an enemy appears on our shores, and the army confronts it, it is held that no officer can receive the pay of a higher grade by virtue of anything in the act referred to." Id., 167, quoting the opinion of the paymaster general in 1898.

OPERATING EXPENSES. See BETTERMENTS, EXPENDITURES FOR (Supp.).

OPERATION. Being in action; effect; transaction. English. See EQUALITY OF OPERATION (Supp.).

OPERATIVE. A factory hand, one who operates machinery. 259 U. S. 527, quoting 231 N. Y. 105, and Webster's New International Dictionary. See WORKMAN. There is a marked distinction between a workman and an employee. Although in a general sense all workmen and operatives are employees, yet all employees are not workmen or operatives (within the meaning of the New York Workmen's Compensation Law). See EMPLOYEE (Supp.).

OPERATIVE PROPERTY. Within the Meaning of Any Section of the California Political Code. In the case of telegraph and telephone companies doing business in the state of California, operative property includes the franchises, rights of way, poles, wires, pipes, conduits, cables, switchboards, telegraph and telephone instruments, batteries, generators, and other electrical appliances, and exchange and other buildings used in the telegraph and telephone business and so much of the land on which said buildings are situate as may be required for the convenient use and occupation of said buildings. 275 U. S. footnote to 398.

OPETIDE. The old time of marriage, which was from epiphany to Ash Wednesday. English.

OPPIGNERARE. In Civil Law. To pledge. English.

OPPOSER. Formerly, an officer of the green wax office, in the English exchequer. English. See APPOSER.

OR OTHER PAYMENTS. Within the Meaning of Section 12 (a) Subd. "First" of the Revenue Act of 1916. The phrase "or other payments" was meant to bring in payments ejusdem generis with "rentals," such as taxes, insurance, interest on mortgages, and the like, constituting liabilities of the lessor on account of the leased premises which the lessee has covenanted to pay. 268 U. S. 64. See RENTALS (Supp.).

ORA. In Old English and Scotch Law. A Saxon coin of value of 16d. Spelman. An ounce of the value of 20d. Burrill.

ORBATION. The condition of being deprived of one's parent or children. English.

ORDER. See FINDING; LEGISLATIVE ACTS OF THE STATE (Supp.).

ORDER FORM. Within the Meaning of Section 2 of the Anti-Narcotic Act of 1918, providing that it shall be unlawful for any person to sell, etc., any of the drugs specified in the first section except in pursuance of a written order of the person to whom the article is sold, etc., on a form issued by the commissioner of internal revenue. The order form is not a mere record of a past transaction—it is a certificate of legality of the transaction being carried on, or else it is a means of discovering the illegality and is useful for the latter purpose. 276 U. S. 351.

ORDINANCE. See LEGISLATIVE ACTS OF THE STATE (Supp.).

ORDINANCE OF THE FOREST. A statute made touching matters and causes of the forest. 33 & 34 Edw. I. R. & L.

ORDINANDI LEX. The law of procedure as distinguished from the substantial part of the law. R. & L.

ORDINATUM EST. It is ordered. The initial words used in entering rules of court in Latin. English.

ORDINES. A general chapter or other solemn convention of the religions of a particular order. R. & L.

ORDO. Rule which monks were obliged to observe; order; regular succession; an order of the court. R. & L.

ORDO ALBUS. The white friars or Augustines; the Cistercians also wore white. R. & L.

ORDO NIGER. The black friars; the Cluniacs likewise wore black. R. & L.

ORIGINAL JURISDICTION. Whether a suit be originally brought in the district court or removed from a state court, the general federal jurisdiction is the same; and the venue or local jurisdiction of the district court over the person of the defendant is dependent in the one case as in the other upon the voluntary action of the non-resident defendant, being acquired in an original suit by his waiver of objection to the venue, and in a removed suit by his application for the removal to the district court. 270 U. S. 367.

Distinction must be made between the general jurisdiction of the district courts, to which section 28 of the Judicial Code relates, and the local jurisdiction over the person of the defendant, to which section 51 relates. The term "original jurisdiction" as used in section 28 refers only to the general jurisdiction conferred on the district courts, and does not relate to the venue provision in section 51; there being "no purpose in extending to removals the personal privilege accorded to defendants by section 51, since removals are had only at the instance of defendants." Id.; 260 U. S. 275, 657.

ORNEST. Trial by battel. English.

P

P. O. An abbreviation of public officer; also of post office. Under the 7 Geo. IV. c. 46, 14, certain banking companies sue and are sued by their "public officer." R. & L.

PACEATUR. Let him be freed or discharged. R. & L.

PADDER. An old term for highway man. English.

PAGA. In Spanish Law. Payment. Las Partidas, Part 5, tit. 14, l. 1. Burrill.

PAGARCHUS. A magistrate of very inferior jurisdiction. English.

PAGUS. A county. R. & L.

PAID. Within the Meaning of the Revenue Act of 1918. Section 200 declares that "paid" means "paid or accrued," and that the phrase "paid or accrued" shall be construed according to the method of accounting upon the basis on which the net income is computed under section 212. And section 212 provides that net income shall be computed on the basis of the taxpayer's annual accounting period in accordance with the method of accounting regularly employed in keeping the books of the taxpayer (269 U. S. 422); but if no such method has been employed, or if the method employed does not reflect the income, the computation shall be made upon a basis and in a manner that, in the opinion of the commissioner, does clearly reflect the income. 271 U. S. 12. See ACCRUAL BASIS.

PAID IN. See SURPLUS (Supp.).

PAID OR ACCRUED. See PAID (Supp.).

PAID-IN SURPLUS. See SURPLUS; INVESTED CAPITAL (Supp.).

PALAM. In Civil Law. Openly; in the presence of many. Dig. 50, 16, 33. Burrill.

PALING-MAN. In Old English Law. A merchant who was a citizen. English.

PANIER. An old English term formerly used by Knights Templars for a person who waited on the table and furnished the diners with what they required. English.

PANNAGE. Mast on which swine fed; money paid for the right to feed swine in the king's forest. English.

PAR VALUE STOCK. There are differences of practical importance between the two classes of stock, par value stock and no-par value stock, as evidenced by the very general adoption of legislation authorizing the issue of no-par value stock, and by the widespread practice of issuing that type of corporate shares. Par value stock may be issued only for money or property equivalent to the par value. No-par value stock may be issued for money or property of any amount or value provided it is not less than $5.00 nor more than $100 per share. From this it follows that all the par value stock of an authorized class must be issued, if issued at all, at a uniform value or price, while no-par value stock may be issued from time to time at different prices or values, although the holders of all these shares are entitled to share equally in the distribution of profits of the corporation. The liability of stockholders of the two classes of stock for the debts of the corporation may be different, and greater facility is permitted in the issuance and marketing of no-par value shares than in the case of stock having a par value.

These differences, both in the legal incidents and in the practical uses of the two classes of stock, not only are a basis for classification of them for purposes of taxation, but make unavoidable certain differences in the method of assessing a tax. Authorized capital stock cannot well be used as the measure of a tax unless some arbitrary value is assigned to the no-par shares; for they may be issued from time to time at varying prices, and until issued, they cannot have any value. To require the stock to be issued at a value fixed in advance of its issue, and to make that value the basis of the tax, would in effect abolish no-par stock. Because of the essential differences between the two kinds of stock, it is difficult to conceive of any other method of assessing a tax which would save the character of no-par stock and not result in similar inequalities. 271 U. S. 56, 57.

PARACIUM. The tenure between parceners, viz.: that which the youngest owes to the eldest without homage or service. Domesd. R. & L.

PARASCEVE. Good Friday. It is a "dies non juridicus." English.

PARDON, POWER OF. Historical Background. "As this power had been exercised, from time immemorial, by the executive of that nation whose language is our language, and to whose judicial institutions ours bear a close resemblance, we adopt their principles respecting the operation and effect of a pardon, and look into their books for the rules prescribing the manner in which it is to be used by the person who would avail himself of it." 267 U. S. 109, quoting Chief Justice Marshall in 7 Peters, 160.

At the time of our separation from Great Britain that power (of pardon by the chief executive) had been exercised by the king, as the chief executive. Prior to the revolution, the colonies being in effect under the laws of England, were accustomed to the exercise of it in the various forms, as they may be found in the English law books. They were, of course, to be applied as occasions occurred, and they constituted a part of the jurisprudence of Anglo-America. At the time of the adoption of the constitution, American statesmen were conversant with the laws of England and familiar with the prerogatives exercised by the crown. Hence, when the words "to grant pardons" were used in the constitution, they conveyed to the mind the authority as exercised by the English crown, or by its representatives in the colonies. At that time, both Englishmen and Americans attached the same meaning to the word pardon. In the convention which framed the constitution, no effort was made to define or change its meaning, although it was limited in cases of impeachment. Id., 110, quoting 18 Howard 311.

The king of England before our revolution, in the exercise of his prerogative, had always exercised the power to pardon attempts of court, just as he did ordinary crimes and misdemeanors and as he has done to the present day. In the mind of a common law lawyer of the eighteenth century the word pardon included within its scope the ending by the king's grace of the punishment of such delinquents, whether it was imposed by the court without a jury or upon indictment, for both forms of trial for contempt were had. 24 Selden Society, 185; Toothill, 46; 1 Keble, 787, 852; Cases in Chancery, 238; Cro. Car. 198.

These cases also show that, long before our constitution, a distinction had been recognized at common law between the effect of the king's pardon to wipe out the effect of a sentence for contempt in so far as it had been imposed to punish the contemnor for violating the dignity of the court and the king, in the public interest, and its efficacy to halt or interfere with the remedial part of the court's order necessary to secure the rights of the injured suitor. Blackstone IV, 397, 398; Hawkins, Pleas of the Crown, 6th Ed., Vol. 2, 553. The same distinction, nowadays referred to as the difference between civil and criminal contempts, is still maintained in English law. Id., 111. In our own law the same distinction clearly appears. 259 U. S. 109; 221 U. S. 418; 204 U. S. 607; 201 U. S. 117.

It is not the fact of punishment but rather its character and purpose that makes the difference between the two kinds of contempts. For civil contempts, the punishment is remedial and for the benefit of the complainant, and a pardon cannot stop it. For criminal contempts the sentence is punitive in the public interest to vindicate the authority of the court and to deter other like delinquents. Id. See CRIMINAL CONTEMPT; CIVIL CONTEMPT; OFFENCES AGAINST THE UNITED STATES (Supp.).

PARTNER. Within the Meaning of Section 51 of the New York Partnership Law, Chapter 408, Laws of 1919. A partner is a co-owner with his partner of specific partnership property, holding this property as a tenant in partnership. Such tenancy confers certain rights with limitations. A partner has a right equal to that of his partners to possess specific partnership property for partnership purposes, but not otherwise. His right in specific partnership property is not assignable nor is it subject to attachment or execution upon a personal claim against him; upon his death the right to the specific property vests not in the partner's personal representative but in the surviving partner; his right in specific property is not subject to dower, curtesy, or allowance to widows, heirs, or next of kin. 277 U. S. 10.

PARTNERSHIP. Within the Meaning of Section 5a of the Bankruptcy Act. A partnership—a person within the meaning of the act—"may be adjudged a bankrupt." This implies that the partnership may be adjudged a bankrupt as a separate entity without reference to the bankruptcy of the individual partners. 276 U. S. 224; 276 U. S. 344. See PERSON (Supp.).

Within the Meaning of the Revenue Act of 1918, Sections 218 (a) and 335 (c). The term "partnership" as used in these sections obviously refers only to ordinary partnerships. 269 U. S. 113. See UNINCORPORATED ASSOCIATION (Supp.).

PAWNBROKER. Within the Meaning of a Seattle Ordinance Regulating the Business of Pawnbroker. Every person whose business or occupation (it) is to take and receive by way of pledge, pawn, or exchange, goods, wares, or merchandise, or any kind of personal property whatever, for the repayment or security of any money loaned thereon, or to loan money on deposit of personal property. 265 U. S. 342. See PAWNSHOP (Supp.).

Pawnbrokers are regarded as carrying on a "business." A feature of it is the lending of money upon the pledge or pawn of personal property which, in case of default, may be sold to pay the debt. While the amounts of the loans made in that business are relatively small and the character of property pledged as security is different, the transactions are similar to loans made by banks on collateral security. The business of lending money on portable securities has been carried on for centuries. In most of the countries of Europe, the pledge system is carried on by governmental agencies; in some of them the business is also carried on by private parties. In England, as in the United States, the private pledge system prevails. In this country, the practice of pledging personal property for loans dates back to early colonial times, and pawnshops have been regulated by state laws for more than a century. Most, if not all, of the states provide for licensing pawnbrokers and authorize regulation by municipalities. Id., 343.

PAWNSHOP. Within the Meaning of a Seattle Ordinance Regulating the Business of Pawnbroker. Every place at which the business of pawnbroker is carried on. 265 U. S. 342. See PAWNBROKER (Supp.).

PETROL. The name used in England for gasoline. 250 U. S. 343.

PETROLEUM. Petroleum has long been popularly regarded as a mineral oil. As its derivation indicates, the word means "rock oil," an oily substance so named because found naturally oozing from crevices in rock. Its existence in this country was known from very early times. 234 U. S. 676. It is a mineral substance obtained from the earth by a process of mining, and lands from which it is obtained may with propriety be called mining lands. Id.; 110 Pa. St. 317.

PETROLEUM PRODUCTS. Oils having a preferential affinity for metalliferous matter. 250 U. S. 343.

PETTIFOGGER. A lawyer who engages in small cases; a lawyer without legal knowledge; one who resorts to dishonest, contemptible, or sharp practices. English.

PICK OF LAND. A piece of land extending out narrow at the corner. English.

PICKLE, PYCLE, or PIGHTEL. A small parcel of land enclosed with a hedge, which, in some countries, is called a "pingle." Encycl. Lond. R. & L.

PILETUS. In Old English Law. An arrow with a knob behind the point to prevent it piercing beyond a certain depth. English.

PILLOW. Within the Meaning of an Act of the Legislature of Pennsylvania, Approved June 14, 1923, regulating the manufacture, sterilization, and sale of bedding, "Pillow," "bolster," or "feather bed" means any bag, case, or covering made of cotton or other textile material, and stuffed or filled with any filler mentioned in the definition of mattress (which see), or with feathers or feather down. 270 U. S. 409. See COMFORTABLE; CUSHION; MATRESS; NEW; SHODDY (Supp.).

PINCERA. In the Old English Law. Butler; the king's butler, whose office it was to select out of the cargo of every vessel laden with wine, one cask at the prow and another at the stern, for the king's use. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 22.

PINNAGE. The pounding of cattle. English.

PLURALITY. A number more than one. The greatest of two or more numbers or amounts, whether a majority or not. If three candidates receive, respectively 600, 400, and 300 votes, the one receiving 600 would have a plurality though not a majority of the votes cast. English.

POENITENTIA. Penitence; repentance. English.

POISON. In Food Legislation. Everything which contains poison is not poison. It depends on the quantity and the combination. A very large majority of the things consumed by the human family contain, under analysis, some kind of poison, but it depends upon the combination, the chemical relation which it bears to the body in which it exists as to whether or not it is dangerous to take into the human system. 232 U. S. 412, quoting Congressional Record, vol. 40, pt. 2, p. 1131.

POLLARDS. An old base coin prohibited by English statute in reign of Edward I. English.

POLLENGERS. In Old English Law. Trees with parts cut off or lopped, not suitable for timber. English.

POLLING THE JURY. Requires that each juror shall himself declare what is his verdict. May be done, at instance of either party, at any time before the verdict is recorded. In some states, lies in the discretion of the judge. 3 Cow. (N. Y.) 23; 1 McCord (S. C.) 24, 525. R. & L.

POPE NICHOLAS TAXATION. An old tribute of the first year's profits of the English church lands levied under a rate made in the time of Pope Nicholas IV., until the 26th year of Henry VIII. English.

PORCION. In Spanish Law. A portion; a piece of land apportioned. English.

PORT. Within the Meaning of Section 21 of an Act Approved June 1884, 23 Stats. 53, 58. The word "port," as used in sections 4178 and 4334 of the Revised Statutes, in reference to painting the name and port of every registered or licensed vessel on the stern of such vessel, shall be construed to mean either the port where the vessel is registered or enrolled, or the place in the same district where the vessel was built or where one or more of the owners reside. 202 U. S. 420. See FOREIGN COUNTRY.

PORT WATCH. See WATCH (Supp.).

PORTIONER. One who divides into shares.

In Old English Law. A clergyman who shares the revenue of a benefice with another.

In Scotch Law. The owner or tenant of a small piece of land. English.

PORTMEN. In Old English Law. The burgesses of the Cinque Ports, also those of Ipswich. English.

PORTMOTE. In Old English Law. A court held in a port. English.

POST TERMINUM. After the term. The return after term of a writ; the fee due on such return. English.

POTWALLERS or POTWALLOPERS. Persons who cooked their own food, and were on that account in some boroughs entitled to vote for members of parliament. 2 Steph. Com. (7 Edit.) 360. R. & L.

POULTRY COUNTER. A former London prison. English.

POUR SEISIR TERRES. A writ for the king to take the lands of a widow held in dower, or to take them in capite, if she married without his consent. English.

POURPARTY. In Old English Law. Partition. English. O. N. B. 11.

POURPRESTURE, PURPRESTURE. An enclosure of public property; an encroachment upon public property. English. 2 Inst. 38; 1 Reeve's Hist. Eng. Law, 156.

POWER. Incidental Power. An incidental power can avail neither to create powers which, expressly or by reasonable implication, are withheld, nor to enlarge powers given; but only to carry into effect those which are granted. 263 U. S. 659. The power to establish branches of a bank cannot be sustained as an incidental power, under Rev. Stats., section 5136, for the mere multiplication of places where the powers of a bank may be exercised is not a necessary incident of the banking business. Id. See GOVERNMENTAL POWER; LEGISLATIVE POWER.

POYNINGS ACT, STATUTE OF DROGHEDA. Statute 10 Henry VII. c. 22, made in Ireland 1495, declaring all statutes made in England prior to be in force in Ireland. Also 10 Henry VII. c. 4, providing that no bill could be introduced in Irish parliament until approved by king of England. English.

PRACTICE. Within the Meaning of the Act to Regulate Commerce, Section 1 (6), (11), and Section 15 (1). The word "practice" considered generally and without regard to context, is not capable of useful construction. If broadly used, it would cover everything carriers are accustomed to do. Its meaning varies so widely and depends so much upon the connection in which it is used that congress will be deemed to have intended to confine its application to acts or things belonging to the same general class as those meant by the words associated with it in the statute. 277 U. S. 299, 300; 242 U. S. 229. When regard is had to that rule and the restrictions required to give the word a reasonable construction, it seems clear that "practice" as used in the sections mentioned does not include or refer to the method or basis used by connecting carriers for the division of revenues, whether the revenue be derived from joint rates or from combination through rates. Id., 300.

PRAECIPUT CONVENTIONNEL. In French Law. The right of a wife to take a portion of the common property before partition. English.

PRAECOGNITA. That necessary to be known in order that what follows may be understood. English.

PRAEDIAL SERVITUDE, PREDIAL SERVITUDE. One relating to land; an easement enjoyed by one estate over another. English.

PRAEFECTURAE. In Roman Law. Towns taken by conquest and ruled by a prefect. English.

PRAESCRPTIONES. In Roman Law. Qualifying words used in connection with a claim or ground of action. English.

PRAEVARICATOR. In the Civil Law. One who betrays or is unfaithful to his trust; an unfaithful advocate. R. & L.

PRECEDENCE. See GIVE PRECEDENCE (Supp.).

PREFERENCE. In Bankruptcy Law. The appropriation by an insolvent debtor of a portion of his property to the payment of a creditor's claim, so that thereby the estate is depleted and the creditor obtains an advantage over other creditors. 225 U. S. 184. See TRANSFER; ACCOUNTS RECEIVABLE. To constitute a preference, it is not necessary that a transfer of property be made directly to the creditor. It may be made to another for his benefit. Id.

Preference implies paying or securing a pre-existing debt of the person preferred. 242 U. S. 443; 227 U. S. 582; 213 U. S. 244.

PREFERRED MARITIME LIEN. Within the Meaning of (a) of the Subsection M of the Ship Mortgage Act, 1920. A lien arising prior in time to the recording and indorsement of a preferred mortgage in accordance with the provisions of this section. 271 U. S. 555.

PREMIER SERJEANT. In England, an attorney representing the sovereign under letters patent with right to be heard on motion before all others, except the attorney-general, solicitor-general and king's or queen's advocate. English. 3 Steph. Com. (7 Edit.) 274 n.

PREMIUM. See MUTUAL, LEVEL PREMIUM PLAN (Supp.).

PRENDER DE BARON. In Old English Law. The taking of a husband. A plea to an appeal by a woman for murder of her husband. English.

PRESBYTERIUM. That part of a church where divine services are performed; formerly applied to the choir or chancel, because it was the place appropriated to the bishop, priest, and other clergy, while the laity were confined to the body of the church. Jacob; R. & L.

PRESCRIPTION. See TO A PATIENT (Supp.).

PRESIDENT. See GOVERNMENTAL POWER (Supp.).

PRESIDENTIAL ELECTORS. Persons chosen by the states of the United States to elect a president and vice-president. Each state selects one for each United States senator and representative in congress. They are now elected by the people, though a state may substitute any other method of selection it sees fit. English.

PREST-MONEY. In Old English Law. Money binding those who received it to be ready to serve the nation upon call. English.

PRESUMED NEGLIGENCE. It is sometimes said that the basis of the carrier's liability for loss of goods or for their damage in transit is "presumed negligence." (13 Wall. 372.) But the so-called presumption is not a true presumption, since it cannot be rebutted, and the statement itself is only another way of stating the rule of substantive law that a carrier is liable for a failure to transport safely goods entrusted to its care, unless the loss or damage was due to the act of God or the public enemy, or the nature of the goods. 270 U. S. 421, 422; 93 U. S. 181; 10 Wall. 189; 7 Wall. 376. See CARELESSNESS OR NEGLIGENCE (Supp.).

PRESUMPTION. A presumption upon a matter of fact, when it is not merely a disguise for some other principle, means that common experience shows the fact to be so generally true that courts may notice the truth. 245 U. S. 561.

PRETENSE. See FALSE PRETENSE (Supp.).

PRETENSES. Averments in a bill in equity made to anticipate a defence. English.

PREVENTIVE SERVICE. In England, that branch of the custom service charged with the prevention of smuggling. English. 19 & 20 Vict. c. 83.

PRICE. See ESTABLISHED PRICE (Supp.).

PRICE REGULATION. See AFFECTED WITH A PUBLIC INTEREST (Supp.).

PRICKING FOR SHERIFFS. The dropping by the queen of England of the point of a pin upon the three candidates for sheriff of a county and selecting the one it falls upon. English. Atk. Sher. 18.

PRICKING NOTE. The written list of packages for export which are loaded from a warehouse directly on a vessel; the number of packages being represented by holes pricked in the paper. English.

PRIORI PETENTII. To the person first applying.

In Probate Practice. Where several are equally entitled to a grant of administration, the rule of the court is to make the grant to the first applicant. Browne Prob. Pr. 174; Cooté Prob. Pr. 173, 180. R. & L.

PRIORITY. See DEBT (Supp.).

PRIVATE DWELLING. Within the Meaning of Section 25, Title II, of the National Prohibition Act. Includes the room or rooms used and occupied not transiently but solely as a residence in an apartment house, hotel, or boarding house. 267 U. S. 142, 143.

PRIVATE OCCUPATION. See PUBLIC INTEREST (Supp.).

PRIVILEGE. See EXCLUSIVE (Supp.).

PRO CONFESSO, BILL TAKEN. In Equity. Where defendant does not answer, the order that the plaintiff may take a decree warranted by the allegations of his bill. English.

PRO CORPORE REGNI. In behalf of the realm. R. & L.

PROBATE. In general usage the term is applied to wills rather than to deeds, and signifies official proof, sometimes ex parte, before a judicial or quasi-judicial officer or tribunal. 238 U. S. 564.

In North Carolina, from an early day, the term has been applied to the proof or acknowledgment required to be made of deeds and other instruments in writing as a condition precedent to registration. In early times, probate was made before the county courts. Laws 1807, ch. 16, p. 10; Laws 1814, ch. 11, p. 12; ch. 19, p. 14. Afterwards, deeds were allowed to be acknowledged or proved "either before one of the judges of the supreme court or of the superior court, or in the court of the county where the land lieth." Rev. Stat. 1837, ch. 37, sec. 1. And in the Revised Code of 1855, ch. 37, sec. 2, the clerk of the county court and his deputy were included among those who might take acknowledgments and proofs within the state. Such acknowledgment or proof was frequently referred to as "probate." Id., 564, 565. In short, the word appears to have been commonly employed, prior to the Code of Civil Procedure, as referring to the proof or acknowledgment of deeds as a condition precedent to registration, irrespective of whether it was taken before a court or a commissioner. And it was so employed in judicial opinions. Id.; 19 N. Car. 83-86; 33 N. Car. 310; 48 N. Car. 117-119; 49 N. Car. 480.

PROBATION. Within the Meaning of the Act of March 4, 1925, providing a probation system for United States courts. Probation is the attempted saving of a man who has taken one wrong step and whom the judge thinks to be a brand who can be plucked from the burning at the time of the imposition of the sentence. Probation was not sought to shorten the term. The beginning of the service of the sentence in a criminal case ends the power of the court even in the same term to change it. The placing of a defendant upon probation is to follow the suspension of the imposition or the suspension of the execution of sentence, without an interval of any part of the execution. 275 U. S. 358. "Probation is the method by which the court disciplines and gives an opportunity to reform to certain offenders without the hardship, the expense, and the risk of subjecting them to imprisonment." Id., quoting Report No. 1377, 68th Congress, 2d Session.

PROCEEDING. The examination of a witness before a grand jury is a "proceeding" within the meaning of the proviso to the general appropriation act of 1903, that no person shall be prosecuted on account of anything which he may testify in any proceeding under the anti-trust law. The word should receive as wide a construction as is necessary to protect the witness in his disclosures. 201 U. S. 43. See also 271 U. S. 191.

PROCEEDINGS. Within the Meaning of Section 24b of the Bankruptcy Act. Proceedings in bankruptcy are those matters of an administrative character, including questions between the bankrupt and his creditors, which are presented in the ordinary course of the administration of the bankrupt's estate. 271 U. S. 181; 224 U. S. 189. In such administrative matters—as to which the courts of bankruptcy proceed in a summary way in the final settlement and distribution of the estate (Id.; 225 U. S. 218)—their orders and decrees may be reviewed by petitions for revision which bring up questions of law only. Id.; 218 U. S. 302. Distinguish between this and "controversies" in bankruptcy, which see.

The essential distinction between the different methods provided for reviewing the orders and decrees of the courts of bankruptcy is, that "controversies" in bankruptcy proceedings, arising between the trustee representing the bankrupt and his creditors, on the one side, and adverse claimants on the other, affecting the extent of the estate to be distributed, may be reviewed both as to fact and law; while "proceedings" in bankruptcy affecting merely the administration and distribution of the estate, may be reviewed in matter of law only, except as to the three classes of such "proceedings" enumerated in section 25a of the Bankruptcy Act, as to which a short right of appeal is given, both as to fact and law. Furthermore, apart from the scope of the review permitted by the act, the distinction between an appeal and a petition for revision in the mere matter of form, is immaterial. Thus, although a petition for revision cannot be treated as an appeal for the purpose of enlarging the scope of the review so as to extend to questions of fact (218 U. S. 302), where a matter which is only reviewable in law is taken up by an appeal, the circuit court of appeals, if the question of law is sufficiently presented on the record, may treat the appeal as a petition for revision and dispose of it accordingly. Id., 182; 191 U. S. 119; 181 U. S. 193.

PROCESS. See PATENTABLE PROCESS (Supp.).

PROINCINCTUS. In the Roman Law. A girding; preparing to engage in a battle. English.

PROCURERS. Persons procuring the defilement of girls under twenty-one years are so called. When they effect their object by false pretenses they are liable, in England, to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding two years, with or without hard labor. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, §49. Similarly punishable under statutes of several states. R. & L.

PRODUCTIO SECTAE. Production of suit.

In Old English Law. The act of introducing secta or witnesses to sustain a case. English.

PROFER. In Old English Law. An offer or proffer; an offer or endeavor to proceed in an action, by any man concerned to do so.

A return made by a sheriff of his accounts into the exchequer; a payment made on such return. Cowell; Burrill.

PROFIT. See INCOME; EXCESS-PROFITS CREDIT; OTHER GAINS OR PROFITS; PERFORMANCE FOR PROFIT; UNDIVIDED PROFITS (Supp.).

PROHIBITED DEGREES OF MARRIAGE. Degrees of relationship within which marriage is prohibited. English. See MARRIAGE.

PROJECTION WELDING. See WELDING (Supp.).

PROLICIDE. The crime of killing one's own child. English.

PRONOUNCE. To utter officially. English.

PROPATRUUS. In Civil Law. A great-grandfather's brother. Bract. fol. 68b. Burrill.

PROPATRUUS MAGNUS. A great-great-uncle. R. & L.

PROPER TITLE. See JUST TITLE (Supp.).

PROPERTY. Property is more than the mere thing which a person owns. It includes the right to acquire, use, and dispose of it. The constitution protects these essential attributes of property. 169 U. S. 391. Property consists of the free use, enjoyment, and disposal of a person's acquisitions without control or diminution save by the law of the land. 1 Blackstone's Commentaries, Cooley's Ed., 127; 245 U. S. 74.

In well-ordered society, property has value chiefly for what it is capable of reproducing, and the activities of mankind are devoted largely to making recurrent gains from the use and development of property, from tillage, mining, manufacture, from the employment of human skill and labor, or from a combination of some of these; gains capable of being devoted to their own support, and the surplus accumulated as an increase of capital. 252 U. S. 50. See BUSINESS; OPERATIVE PROPERTY; PUBLIC INTEREST; REAL PROPERTY.

Within the Meaning of Section 12a of the Income Tax Law of September 8, 1916, providing that the net income of corporations organized in the United States shall be ascertained by deducting from gross income, among other things, "a reasonable allowance for the exhaustion . . . of property arising out of its use." The interest of a corporate lessee of a mine under a lease for a term of years obliging it to mine a minimum tonnage of ore annually and to pay the lessor, owner of the fee, a stated royalty per ton mined, is propriety. 267 U. S. 369. In this section, there is nothing to suggest that the word "property" is used in any restricted sense. In the case of mines, a specific kind of property, the exhaustion is described as depletion, and is limited to an amount not exceeding the market value in the mine of the product mined and sold during the year.

The right, by a corporate lessee of a mine, to mine and remove ore and reduce it to possession and ownership is property. As the process goes on, the property interest of the lessee in the mines is lessened from year to year, as the owner's property interest in the same mines is likewise lessened. There is an exhaustion of property in the one case as in the other. 267 U. S. 370.

PROPONE. In Scotch Law. To state. To propose a defence, is to state or move it. 1 Kames' Equity, Pref. Burrill.

PROPOSITION. An offer to perform; that proposed for acceptance; the act of offering. English.

PROPRIOS, PROPIOS. In Spanish Law. Lands set aside for public use in a town; municipal lands. English. 12 Peter's R. 442, note.

PROSECUTION. The word is sometimes used to include the finding and return of an indictment. But there are also relations in which it comprehends only the proceedings had after the indictment is returned. 265 U. S. 236.

PROTECTION OF THE LAWS. See EQUAL PROTECTION OF THE LAWS (Supp.).

PROTEST. Within the Meaning of Section 1324 (a) of the Revenue Act of November 23, 1921. A protest is for the purpose of inviting attention of the taxing officers to the illegality of the tax collection, so that they may take remedial measures at once. But if protests are based on reasons of no validity they do not accomplish the public purpose for which they are devised. 270 U. S. 173.

PROVISIONS, CONSTITUTIONAL. See LEGISLATIVE ACTS OF THE STATE (Supp.).

PROVISO. The general office of a proviso is to except something from the enacting clause, or to qualify and restrain its generality and prevent misinterpretation. 266 U. S. 534; 260 U. S. 435; 191 U. S. 551; 128 U. S. 181; 15 Pet. 445. Its grammatical and logical scope is confined to the subject-matter of the principal clause. Id., 535; 197 U. S. 143. And although sometimes used to introduce independent legislation, the presumption is that, in accordance with its primary purpose, it refers only to the provision to which it is attached. Id.; 204 U. S. 149.

PUBLIC ACCOUNTANT. See CERTIFIED PUBLIC ACCOUNTANT.

PUBLIC INTEREST. Businesses said to be clothed with a public interest justifying some public regulation may be divided into three classes: (1) Those which are carried on under the authority of a public grant of privileges which either expressly or impliedly imposes the affirmative duty of rendering a public service demanded by any member of the public. Such are the railroads, other common carriers, and public utilities. (2) Certain occupations, regarded as exceptional, the public interest attaching to which, recognized from earliest times, has survived the period of arbitrary laws by parliament or colonial legislatures for regulating all trades and callings. Such are those of the keepers of inns, cabs, and grist mills. 86 Me. 102; 241 U. S. 254. (3) Businesses which though not public at their inception may be fairly said to have risen to be such and have become subject in consequence to some government regulation. They have come to hold such a peculiar relation to the public that this is superimposed upon them. The owner by devoting his business to the public use, in effect grants the public an interest in that use and subjects himself to public regulation to the extent of that interest although the property continues to belong to its private owner and to be entitled to protection accordingly. 262 U. S. 535; 256 U. S. 135; 244 U. S. 47; 233 U. S. 389; 219 U. S. 104; 153 U. S. 391; 143 U. S. 517; 110 U. S. 347; 94 U. S. 113.

In a sense, the public is concerned about all lawful business because it contributes to the prosperity and well being of the people. The public may suffer from high prices or strikes in many trades, but the expression "clothed with a public interest," as applied to a business, means more than that the public welfare is affected by continuity or by the price at which a commodity is sold or a service rendered. The circumstances which clothes a particular kind of business with a public interest, must be such as to create a peculiarly close relation between the public and those engaged in it, and raise implications of an affirmative obligation on their part to be reasonable in dealing with the public. Id., 536.

It has never been supposed, since the adoption of the constitution, that the business of the butcher, or the baker, the tailor, the woodchopper, the mining operator, or the miner was clothed with such a public interest that the price of his product or his wages could be fixed by state regulation. One does not, nowadays, devote one's property or business to the public use or clothe it with a public interest merely because one makes commodities for, and sells to, the public in the common callings of which those above mentioned are instances. Id., 537.

An ordinary producer, manufacturer, or shopkeeper may sell or not sell as he likes (241 U. S. 256; 166 U. S. 320), and while this feature does not necessarily exclude businesses from the class clothed with a public interest, it usually distinguishes private from quasi-public occupations. Id., 538; 233 U. S. 389.

In nearly all the businesses included under the third head above, the thing which gave the public interest was the indispensable nature of the service and the exorbitant charges and arbitrary control to which the public might be subjected without regulation. Id.

It is very difficult to lay down a working rule by which readily to determine when a business has become "clothed with a public interest." All business is subject to some kinds of public regulation; but when the public becomes so peculiarly dependent upon a particular business that one engaging therein subjects himself to a more intimate public regulation is only to be determined by the process of exclusion and inclusion and to gradual establishment of a line of distinction. Id., 539.

To say that a business is clothed with a public interest is not to import that the public may take over its entire management and run it at the expense of the owner. The extent to which regulation may reasonably go varies with different kinds of businesses. Id.

Property becomes clothed with a public interest when used in a manner to make it of public consequence, and affect the community at large. When, therefore, one devotes his property to a use in which the public has an interest, he, in effect, grants to the public an interest in that use, and must submit to be controlled by the public for the common good, the extent of the interest he has thus created. He may withdraw his grant by discontinuing the use; but so long as he maintains the use, he must submit to the control. Id., 540, 541; 94 U. S. 126. See AFFECTED WITH A PUBLIC INTEREST.

PUBLIC LANDS. See UNAPPROPRIATED PUBLIC LANDS (Supp.).

PUBLIC POLICY. In a Case Contending that a Contract in Suit was Contrary to Public Policy. The meaning of the phrase "public policy" is vague and variable; there are no fixed rules by which to determine what it is. It has never been defined by the courts, but has been left loose and free of definition, in the same manner as "fraud." 275 U. S. 205; 1 Story on Contracts (5th Ed.), section 675; 144 U. S. 233.

PUBLICUM JUS. In Civil Law. Public law; that law which regards the state of the commonwealth. Inst. 1, 8, 4, 1. Burrill.

PUEBLO INDIANS. Although sedentary, industrious, and disposed to peace, the Pueblo Indians always have lived in isolated communities, and are a simple, uninformed people, ill-prepared to cope with the intelligence and greed of other races. 271 U. S. 441, 442. They are plainly within the spirit of the provision of 1834 and 1851 regulating trade and intercourse with the Indian tribes. Id. See INDIAN TRIBE (Supp.).

PUISSANCE PATERNELLE. In the French Law. The power of the parent over his child. English.

PULSARE. In Civil Law. To beat without giving pain.

To accuse or charge; to proceed against a law. Calv. Lex.

PUNCTUATION. Punctuation is a minor, and not a controlling, element in interpretation, and courts will disregard the punctuation of a statute, or repunctuate it, if need be, to give effect to what otherwise appears to be its proper sense and true meaning. 268 U. S. 91, quoting 129 Fed. 527.

PUNCTUM TEMPORIS. A point of time, an indivisible period of time; the shortest space of time; an instant. Calv. Lex. A point or period from which a computation of time is made. 2 Alison's Cr. Pract. 188. Burrill.

PUNCTURED WOUND. In Medical Jurisprudence. A wound made with an object having a sharp cutting point; a stab. Tayl. Med. Jur. 185. Burrill.

PUNDBRECH. In Old English Law. Poundbreach; the offence of breaking a pound; the illegal taking of cattle out of a pound by any means whatsoever. LL. Hen. I. c. 40. Burrill.

PUNJAB. See RACE (Supp.).

PURCHASE. v. Within the Meaning of Rev. Stat., Section 452, prohibiting officers, etc., of the general land office to purchase public land. The term "purchase" is inclusive of the various modes of securing title to or rights in public lands under the general laws regulating their disposal. 223 U. S. 93.

PURE TRUST. See MASSACHUSETTS TRUST (Supp.).

PURGE DES HYPOTHEQUES. In French Law. Relieving an estate of incumbrances of any kind in accordance with legal forms. English.

PURPURE or PORPIN. Heraldic term for color commonly called "purple," expressed in engravings by lines in bend sinister. In the arms of princes it was formerly called mercury, and in those of peers, amethyst. R. & L.

PUTS AND REFUSALS. Time bargains, or contracts for the sale of supposed stock on a future day. R. & L. See PUTS AND CALLS.

PUTTING IN SUIT. Bringing suit upon an instrument writing or other cause of action. English.

PUTURE. An old English right claimed by bailiffs and keepers of the forest, to take food for man, horse, and dog, of those within their jurisdiction. English.

PYKERIE. In Old Scotch Law. Petty theft. 2 Pitt. Crim. Trials, 43. Burrill.

Q

QUADRAGESIMA. The fortieth; the fortieth day before Easter, or first Sunday in Lent. English.

QUADRAGESIMS. The third part of the year books of Edward III. 3 Reeve's Hist. Eng. Law, c. XVI, 148. R. & L.

QUADRANT. An angular measure of ninety degrees. R. & L.

QUADRIENNIUM. In the Civil Law. A course of four years study required of law students as preparatory to studying the Code. English.

QUADROON. Progeny of a white person and a mulatto; a person of one-fourth negro blood. Abbott.

QUAE PLURA. What more. An old English writ directing the escheator to enquire what more tenements or lands a person had died seized of. Reg. Orig. 293. Rendered useless by 12 Car. II. c. XXIV.

QUAESTA. An indulgence or remission of penance, sold by the pope. R. & L.

QUAESTIONES PERPETUAE. In Roman Law. Tribunals with authority to enquire into alleged crimes. English.

QUAKER. One who quakes. A term applied to a member of the Society of Friends; originally because of their emotional manifestation of contrition. English.

QUANTUM DAMNIFICATUS. How much he has been injured. An issue sent from chancery to be determined at common law, as to the amount of damages sustained by plaintiff. English.

QUARE NON ADMISIT. Wherefore he did not admit. The name of a writ against a bishop for refusing to present the clerk of the prevailing party in an action of quare impedit, after being directed to do so by the writ of ad admittendum clericum (q. v.). Abbott.

QUARENTENA TERRAE. An old English term for an eighth of a mile. English.

QUARTER-SECTION. See SECTION OF LAND.

QUARTERLY COURT. The name of certain courts in Kentucky of very limited jurisdiction, which includes, however, appeals from justices of the peace. Abbott.

QUASI-PUBLIC OCCUPATION. See PUBLIC INTEREST (Supp.).

QUATOR PEDIBUS CURRIT. Runs upon four feet; runs on all fours. A term used to denote an exact correspondence. 1 W. Bl. 145. Burrill. See ALL FOURS.

QUEM REDITUM REDDIT. In Old English Law. A writ allowed the grantee of a rent, other than rent service, to compel the tenants to attorn to him. English.

QUERENS. A plaintiff; a complainant. English.

QUESTION. See DRAWN IN QUESTION (Supp.).

QUESTMAN or QUESTMONGER. In Old English Law. One who instituted actions at law; one appointed to examine into alleged violations of law; a church warden. English. Prid. Churchw. Guide.

QUIET. Undisturbed by claim or litigation. English.

QUIETARE. In Old English Law. To discharge; to acquit. English.

QUIETE CLAMANTIA. In Old English Law. Quit-claim. Bract. fol. 33b. Burrill.

QUILLE. In French Marine Law. Keel; the keel of a vessel. Ord. Mar. liv. 3, tit. 6, art. 8. Burrill.

QUINQUE PORTUS. In Old English Law. The Cinque Ports. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 54, ¶8. Burrill.

QUINSIEME. In Old English Law. A fifteenth; a tax so called. Cowell; Burrill.

QUINTAL or KINTAL. In metric system, 220.46 pounds avoirdupois. English.

QUIRE OF DOVER. An old English record giving the tenures for watching and repairing Dover Castle; also the services in the Cinque Ports. English.

QUOD CLERCI NON ELIGANTUR IN OFFICIO BALLIVI, ETC. A writ which lay for a clerk, who, by reason of some land he had, was made, or was about to be made, bailiff, beadle, reeve, or some such officer, to obtain exemption from serving the office. R. & L. Reg. Orig. 187.

QUOD NON FUIT NEGATUM. Which was not denied. A phrase in old reports. Latch, 213. Burrill.

QUOD NOTA. Which note; which mark. A reporter's note in the old books, directing attention to a point or rule. Dyer, 23. Burrill.

QUOD PARTES REPLACITENT. That the parties do replead. The form of the judgment on award of a repleader. 2 Salk. 579. Burrill.

QUONIAM ATTACHIAMENTA. Since the attachments. One of the oldest books in the Scotch law; so called from the two first words of the volume. Bell. Dict. Still sometimes cited in argument in the Scotch courts. 7 Wilson & Shaw's R. 9. Burrill.

RACE. The various authorities are in irreconcilable disagreement as to what constitutes a proper racial division. For instance, Blumenbach has five races; Keane, following Linnaeus, four; Deniker, twenty-nine. Dictionary of Races, Senate Document No. 662, 61st Cong., 3d sess., 1910-1911, p. 6. See generally, 2 Encyclopaedia Britannica (11th Ed.), p. 113. The explanation probably is that "the innumerable varieties of mankind run into one another by insensible degrees," and to arrange them in sharply bounded divisions is an undertaking of such uncertainty that common agreement is practically impossible. 261 U. S. 212.

It may be, therefore, that a given group cannot be properly assigned to any of the enumerated grand racial divisions. The type may have been so changed by intermixture of blood as to justify an intermediate classification. Something very like this has actually taken place in India. Thus, in Hindustan and Berar there was such an intermixture of the "Aryan" invader with the dark-skinned Dravidian. Id.; 13 Encyclopaedia Britannica (11th Ed.), p. 502.

In the Punjab and Rajputana, while the invaders seem to have met with more success in the effort to preserve their racial purity, intermarriages did occur producing an intermingling of the two and destroying to a greater or less degree the purity of the "Aryan" blood. The rules of caste, while calculated to prevent this intermixture, seem not to have been entirely successful. "In spite, however, of the artificial restrictions placed on the intermarrying of the castes, the mingling of the two races seems to have proceeded at a tolerably rapid rate. Indeed, the paucity of women of the Aryan stock would probably render these mixed unions almost a necessity from the very outset; and the vaunted purity of blood which the caste rules were calculated to perpetuate can scarcely have remained of more than a relative degree even in the case of the Brahman caste." Id., 213, quoting 13 Encyclopaedia Britannica, p. 503. See ARYAN; CAUCASIAN (Supp.).

RACEWAY. A canal; an artificial channel for the confinement of water within certain limits, usually made to increase its velocity and power. English.

RACHAT. In French Law. The right to buy back reserved by a seller. English.

RACHIMBURGHII. In Old European Law. Rachenburgers or Rakenburghs; judges among the Saliens, Ripuarians, and some other nations of Germany who sat with the count in his court and were generally associated with him in all matters. L. Salic, tit. 52, 59; L. Ripuar. tit. 32, ¶ 3. Burrill.

RADICALS. A political party. Term arose in England in 1818, when the popular leaders, Hunt, Cartwright, and others, sought to obtain a radical reform in the representative system of parliament. Bolingbroke Disc. on Parties, Let. 18. R. & L.

RAILROAD. Within the Meaning of Paragraph 3, Section 400 of the Transportation Act. The term "railroad" includes all switches, spurs, tracks, terminals, and terminal facilities of every kind used or necessary in the transportation of persons or property, including freight depots, yards, and grounds used therein. 264 U. S. 342. See CAR SERVICE; COMMON CARRIER BY RAILROAD; EXPRESS COMPANY; EXTENSION OF RAILROAD.

RAILROAD TIE-PLATE. See TIE-PLATE (Supp.).

RAJPUTANA. See RACE (Supp.).

RAN. In Saxon and Old English Law. Open theft, or robbery. Leg. Saxon. Canuti R. c. 58. Burrill.

RAPTO HAEREDIS, RAPTU HAEREDIS. In Old English Law. A writ granted where an heir, seized of lands held by socage tenure, has been taken away from those entitled to his custody. English.

RAPTOR. In Old English Law. A ravisher. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 52, ¶ 12. Burrill.

RAPUIT. In Old English Law. Ravished. A technical word in old indictments. 2 East, 30. Burrill.

RASUS. In Old English Law. A rase; a measure of onions, containing twenty fones, and each fonis twenty-five heads. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 12, ¶ 12. Burrill.

RATE. See CURRENT RATE OF WAGES (Supp.).

RATIFICATION. See ACQUIESCENCE (Supp.).

RATIHABITIO. In Civil and Old English Law. A holding as approved; approval or ratification. Dig. 46, 8. Burrill.

RATING. The daily rating of a local mine for any month is based on its tonnage shipped during the preceding month, and is identical with its daily capacity to produce coal. The rating of a joint mine is calculated in the same way that the daily rating of a local mine is determined, except that its shipments over all carriers serving it are considered in determining its total capacity to produce coal. The figure so ascertained is called the "gross daily rating," in recognition of the fact that the rating of a joint mine does not represent its capacity to ship over each carrier on days when it uses more than one, but on the contrary represents its total daily capacity to ship over all lines which serve it. 265 U. S. 535. See LOCAL MINE; JOINT MINE.

RATIONABILE ESTOVERIUM. Ali-mony. English.

RATIONE IMPOTENTIAE. On account of inability. A ground of qualified property in some animals ferae naturae, as in the young ones while they are unable to fly or run. 2 Bl. Com. 394. Burrill.

RATIONE PRIVILEGII. A term applied to the privilege of taking or killing wild animals on the land of another. English.

RATIONE SOLI. On account of soil. Applied to the cause of property in bees. English. 2 Bl. Com. 393.

RATIONES. In Old English Law. The pleadings in a suit. English.

RAZON. In Spanish Law. Cause. Las Paridas, Part. 4, tit. 4, 1, 2. Burrill.

RE. In the matter of; in the case of. King; English.

READER. (1) In the middle term those persons who are appointed to deliver lectures or readings at certain periods during the term.

(2) Clerks in holy orders who read prayers and assist in the performance of divine service in the chapels of the several inns of court. Mozley & W. Abbott.

READING IN. Obligation of one admitted to a rectory or other benefice, within two months after possession, to publicly read morning and evening service of book of common prayer and read and assent to the Thirty-nine Articles and also a declaration of assent of conformity to the Liturgy, accompanied with certificate of the ordinary so attested. 2 Steph. Com. (7th Edit.) 687, R. & L.

REAL PROPERTY. Real property, particularly in a city, comes to have a recognized value, which is relatively stable and easily ascertained. It also comes to have a recognized rental value, the amount being fixed with due regard to what is just and reasonable between landlord and tenant in view of the value of the property and the outlay which the owner must make for taxes and other current charges. 267 U. S. 241. See RENTAL (Supp.).

REALITY OF LAWS. The quality of laws concerning property or things not persons. English.

REALIZE. To receive value or money. English.

REBATE. In Commerce. Transportation at a less rate in dollars and cents than the published rate which the shipping public are charged. 270 U. S. 524. See CONCESSION (Supp.).

RECAPTURE CLAUSES. The name given to paragraphs 5-17 in the Transportation Act of 1920, c. 91, section 422, section 15a, Stat. 456, 489-491. By the recapture clauses congress is enabled to maintain uniform rates for all shippers and yet keep the net returns of railways, whether strong or weak, to the varying percentages which are fair respectively for them. The recapture clauses are thus the key provision of the whole plan. 263 U. S. 480.

RECEIPTS. See GROSS RECEIPTS FROM OPERATION (Supp.).

RECEIVER. Within the Meaning of Section 3647 of the Political Code of California. Embraces any person acting as agent or depository of funds for a court. 246 U. S. 395. See FRIENDLY RECEIVER-SHIPS (Supp.).

RECENS INSECUTIO. In Old English Law. Fresh suit; fresh pursuit; pursuit of a thief immediately after the discovery of the robbery. 1 Bl. Com. 297. Burrill.

RECEPISSE DE COTISATION. In French Law. A receipt stating the interest of a subscriber to a mutual insurance company. English.

RECESSUS MARIS. In Old English Law. A going back; reliction or retreat of the sea. Hale de Jur. Mar. pars. 1, c. 6. Burrill.

RECONTINUANCE. In Old English Law. The recovery of possession of a right or estate of which, for a time, one was deprived. English.

RECONVENIRE. In Canon and Civil Law. To make a cross demand upon the actor or plaintiff. 4 Reeve's Hist. 14. Burrill.

RECONVERSION. That imaginary process by which a prior constructive conversion is annulled and the converted property restored in contemplation of law to its original state. R. & L. Snell Eq. 166.

RECONVEYANCE. A conveying back; the act of deeding back property to a previous owner; the operation of law, in conveying back mortgaged property to the owner upon the payment of the mortgage debt. English.

RECORDS AND REPORTS. Within the Meaning of the Prohibition Act providing that no person shall manufacture, etc., any liquor without making a permanent record thereof. These records refer to records and reports required of permittees. 271 U. S. 359, 360. See NO PERSON (Supp.).

RECORDS OF CORPORATION. The "records" of a corporation import the transcript of its charter and by-laws, the minutes of its meetings, the books containing the accounts of its official doings, and the written evidence of its contracts and business transactions. 236 U. S. 334.

RECOURSE. A going back; to return; the right to exact payment from a second party, as an indorser, where the first party failed to pay. English.

RECOVERED. See SUED FOR AND RECOVERED (Supp.).

RECTA PRISA REGIS. The king's right of prisage. See PRISAGE.

RECTIFICATION. Correction of an instrument in order to make it show the true intention of the parties. Correction; setting right. The determination or location of boundaries. English. See REFORM.

RECTO, BREVE DE. Writ of right. Abolished by 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 27. R. & L.

RECTO DE ADVOCATIONE ECCLESIAE. In Old English Law. A writ allowed one having right to advowson, against a stranger who presented a clerk on the death of the incumbent. English.

RECTO DE CUSTODIA TERRAE ET HAEREDIS. An old writ for the custody of an heir and his land. English.

RECTO DE DOTE UNDE NIHIL HABET. See DE DOTE UNDE NIHIL HABET.

RECTO DE RATIONABILI PARTE. See DE RATIONABILI PARTE BONORUM.

RECTO QUANDO (or QUIA) DOMINUS REMISIT CURIAM. See QUIA DOMINUS REMISIT CURIAM.

RECTO SUR DISCLAIMER. An old writ of right allowed the lord on disclaimer by the tenant. English.

RECTOR SINECURE. A rector not having care of the souls of the parishioners. 2 Steph. Com. (7th Edit.) 683. See SINECURE.

RED, RAED, or REDE. A Saxon term for counsel or advise. English.

RE-DEMISE. See DEMISE AND RE-DEMISE.

RED-HANDED. With the marks of fresh crime upon him. R. & L.

REDHIBERE. In the Civil Law. To have again; to have back; to cause a seller to have again what he had before. Dig. 21, 1, 21, Pr. Burrill.

RE-EXCHANGE. A second exchange. The sum demanded by the holder of a foreign bill of exchange which was dishonored. English. Byles Bills, 412; In re General South American Co., 7 Ch. D. 637.

REFER. To deliver a person for hearing, examination, and opinion; to direct attention to. English.

REGAL FISH. Whales and sturgeons. 2 Steph. Com. (7th Edit.), 19n., 448, 539, 540. R. & L.

REGALE. In Old French Law. A fee paid to the seigneur of a fief on the election of an ecclesiastic feudatory. English.

REGALITY. In Scotch Law. Territorial jurisdiction conferred by the crown. English.

REGIUS. Royal; applied to certain professorships founded and professors appointed in English and Scotch universities. English.

REGNI POPULI. An English term applied to people living in Surrey and Essex, and on the Hampshire seacoast. English.

REGRANT. A second grant of real estate which had come back to the former owner. English.

REGRESS. A going back. Ingress, egress, and regress comprise the rights of going or entering upon land, going off it, and going back upon it. Burrill.

REGULAR TERM OF COURT. See SPECIAL TERM (Supp.).

REGULATE. Within the Meaning of the Commerce Clause of the Transportation Act of 1920. To foster, protect, and control the commerce with appropriate regard to the welfare of those who are immediately concerned, as well as the public at large, and to promote its growth and insure its safety. 263 U. S. 478; 223 U. S. 47; 204 U. S. 33; 153 U. S. 529; 127 U. S. 39; 102 U. S. 691; 10 Wall. 564. See COMMERCE; AMONG THE SEVERAL STATES (Supp.).

REINSURANCE RESERVE. See RE-SERVE FUNDS (Supp.).

RELAXARE. In Old Conveyancing. To release. Litt. Sect. 445. Burrill.

REMERE. In French Law. Redemption. With the right to redeem. A contract by which the seller is given the right to buy back the thing sold. English.

REMISSNESS. Implies that the act involved was performed, but was done in a tardy, negligent, or careless manner. Word not applicable to entire omission or default. See Baldwin vs. United States Telegraph Co., 6 Abb. Pr. N. S. 405, 423. Abbott.

RENANT or RENIANT. Denying. 32 Hen. VIII. c. 2. R. & L.

RENDER. In Feudal Law. Used in connection with rents and heriots. Goods subject to rent or heriot-service were said to lie in render, when the lord might not only seize the identical goods, but may also distraint for them. Abbott.

RENOVARE. In Old English Law. To renew. English. Ambli. 131.

RENT, SLEEPING. A fixed rent provided for in mining leases in lieu of royalty or percentage of profits. English.

RENTAL. Within the Meaning of Section 12 (a) Subd. "First," of the Revenue Act of 1916. The term "rentals," since there is nothing to indicate the contrary, must be taken in its usual and ordinary sense, that is, as implying a fixed sum, or property amounting to a fixed sum, to be paid at stated times for the use of property. 268 U. S. 63; 19 R. I. 11; 2 Washburn, Real Property (6th Ed.) section 1187. In that sense it does not include payments, uncertain both as to amount and time, made for the cost of improvements or even for taxes. Id.; 232 Mass. 513; 13 N. Y. Super Ct. 266, 267; 41 N. Y. 435; 110 N. Y. Supp. 1045. See OR OTHER PAYMENTS (Supp.).

Rental Value. That measure of compensation commonly asked and paid for the occupancy and use of real property. 267 U. S. 241. See REAL PROPERTY (Supp.).

REO ABSENTE. In the absence of the defendant. English.

REPAIRS. See BETTERMENTS, EXPENDITURES FOR (Supp.).

REPETUNDAE. In Roman Law. Money extorted by provincial officials while discharging the duties of their office. English.

REPLETION. The condition of a benefice which has sufficient revenue for the title of its incumbent. English.

REPONE. In Scotch Practice. To replace; to restore to a former state or right. 2 Alison's Crim. Pr. 351. Burrill.

REPOSITION OF THE FOREST. In the Old English Law. An act whereby certain forest grounds, being made purieu upon view, were by a second view laid to the forest again (put back into the forest). Manwood; Burrill.

REPRODUCTION VALUE. Reproduction value is not a matter of outlay, but of estimate. It should include a reasonable allowance for organization and other overhead charges that necessarily would be incurred in reproducing the utility. 267 U. S. 362.

REPSILVER. In Old Records. Money paid by servile tenants for exemptions from the customary duty of reaping for the lord. Burrill.

REPUDIUM. In the Roman Law. A breaking off the contract of espousals, or a marriage intended to be solemnized. Sometimes translated divorce. Not proper sense.

Dig. 50, 16, 191; Taylor's Civ. Laws, 349. Burrill.

RES JUDICATA. At common law the doctrine of res judicata did not extend to a decision on habeas corpus refusing to discharge the prisoner. The state courts generally have accepted that rule where not modified by statute; the lower federal courts usually have given effect to it; and the United States Supreme Court has conformed to it and thereby sanctioned it, although announcing no express decision on the point. 265 U. S. 230; 228 U. S. 658; 183 U. S. 378.

While the doctrine of res judicata does not apply to unmixed questions of law, a fact, question, or right distinctly adjudged cannot be disputed in a subsequent action between the same parties, even upon another demand and though the original determination was reached upon an erroneous view or application of the law. 266 U. S. 242. "The general principle announced in numerous cases is that a right, question, or fact distinctly put in issue and directly determined by a court of competent jurisdiction, as a ground of recovery, cannot be disputed in a subsequent suit between the same parties or their privies; and even if the second suit is for a different cause of action, the right, question, or fact once so determined must, as between the same parties or their privies, be taken as conclusively established, so long as the judgment in the first suit remains unmodified." Id., quoting 168 U. S. 48.

RESCYT (L. Fr.). Resciet; receipt; the receiving or harboring a felon, after the commission of crime. Britt. c. 23. Burrill.

RESERVE FUNDS. Within the Meaning of the Revenue Act of October 3, 1913. The term "reserve funds" has a technical meaning. The compensation which an insurance company agrees to pay soliciting agents has no relation to the reserve held to meet maturing policies; and when it sets aside a fund to provide payments to such agents this cannot be regarded as a reserve within intendment of the statute. 271 U. S. 120; 269 U. S. 197; 244 U. S. 585.

Within the Meaning of the Revenue Act of 1916, Section 12. The term "reserve funds" does not embrace funds held by a fire and marine insurance company, as required by the New York superintendent of insurance, to cover accrued but unsettled claims for losses. 269 U. S. 202. Quoting 244 U. S. 589 on the subject: The question is "whether within the meaning of the act of congress, 'reserve funds,' with annual or occasional additions, are 'required by law,' in Pennsylvania to be maintained by fire and marine insurance companies other than the 'unearned premium' or 'reinsurance reserve,' known to the general law of insurance."

"It appears that under this legislation, and under previous statutes in force since 1873, the insurance commissioner has required plaintiff (a fire and marine insurance company) and similar companies to return each year, as an item among their liabilities, the net amount of unpaid losses and claims, whether actually adjusted, in process of adjustment, or resisted. And, although this practice has not been sanctioned by any decision of the supreme court of the state, it is relied upon as an administrative interpretation of the law."

"Conceding full effect to this, it still does not answer the question whether the amounts required to be held against unpaid losses, in the case of fire and marine insurance companies, are held as 'reserves,' within the meaning of the Pennsylvania law or of the act of congress, however they may be designated upon the official forms. As already appears, the Pennsylvania act specifically requires debts and claims of all kinds to be included in the statement of liabilities, and treats them as something distinct from reserves. The object is to exercise abundant caution to maintain the companies in a secure financial position."

"The act of congress, on the other hand, deals with reserves not particularly in their bearing upon the solvency of the company, but as they aid in determining what part of the gross income ought to be treated as net income for purposes of taxation. There is a specific provision for deducting 'all losses actually sustained within the year and not compensated by insurance or otherwise.' And this is a sufficient indication that losses in immediate contemplation, but not as yet actually sustained, were not intended to be treated as part of the reserve funds; that term rather having reference to the funds ordinarily held as against the contingent liability on outstanding policies." Id.

RESIDENT. A corporation (within the meaning of the jurisdictional statutes) is a resident of the state in which it is incorporated, and not a resident or inhabitant of any other state—even of one within which it is engaged in business. 270 U. S. 366; 215 U. S. 509; 160 U. S. 229.

RESILIRE (Lat.). In Old English Law. To draw back from a contract before it is made binding. Literally, to leap back, or start back. Bract. fol. 38; Fleta, lib. 2, c. 58, § 3. Burrill.

RESOLUCION. In Spanish Colonial Law. An opinion formed by some superior authority on matters referred to its decision and forwarded to inferior authorities for their instruction and government. Schmidt's Civ. Law, 93, note 1. Burrill.

RESORT, COURT OF LAST. The highest court to which a cause can be taken on writ of error or appeal. English.

RESPECTUS. In Old English and Scotch Law. Respite; delay; continuance of time; postponement. Glanv. lib. 12, c. 9. Time for payment. Mag. Cart. 9 Hen. III. c. 19. Burrill.

RESTAMPING WRIT. In England, applied to stamping a writ a second time in the proper office. English.

RESTRAINT OF COMPETITION. See FREE COMPETITION (Supp.).

RESTRAINT OF TRADE. See MONOPOLY; CONTRACT IN RESTRAINT OF TRADE (Supp.).

RESTRICTED ALLOTMENT. See TRUST ALLOTMENT (Supp.).

RESTRICTION. The act of restricting; limitation; that which limits or restricts; a restraint. English.

RESURRENDER. The reconveyance of copyhold land mortgaged by surrender after payment of a mortgaged debt. English. 2 Dav. Prec. Conv. 1332n.

RETIRED FROM ACTIVE SERVICE. Within Section 1455, Rev. Stats. "No officer of the navy shall be retired from active service, or wholly retired from the service, without a full and fair hearing before such navy retiring-board, if he shall demand it, except in cases where he may be retired by the president at his own request, or on account of age or length of service, or on account of his failure to be recommended by an examining board for promotion." 263 U. S. 34.

RETONSOR. In Old English Law. A clipper of money. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 20, § 122. Burrill.

RETRACTUS FEUDALIS. In Old Scotch Law. The power which a superior possessed of paying off a debt due to an adjudging creditor and taking a conveyance to the adjudication. Bell's Dict. Burrill.

RETRAIT. In Old French and Canadian Law. The taking back of a fief by the seignior, in case of alienation by the vassal. A right of preemption by the seignior, in case of sale of the land by the grantee. Dunkin's Address, 40, 93. Burrill.

RETROCESSION CONTRACTS. In Insurance. Contracts reinsuring reinsurers. 268 U. S. 554.

RETURNING FROM TRANSPORTATION. Coming back to England before the term of punishment is determined. It was an offence against public justice. 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 67. The punishment of transportation is abolished. R. & L.

REVELAND. Land under the authority of a sheriff; land held by socage. English.

REVENUE BILLS. Within the Meaning of the Constitutional Provision That They Must Originate in the House of Representatives and Not in the Senate. Revenue bills are those that levy taxes in the strict sense of the word and are not bills for other purposes which may incidentally create revenue. 202 U. S. 429. See also 167 U. S. 196.

REVENUE LAWS. See REVENUE BILLS (Supp.).

REVESTIRE (L. Lat.). In Old European Law. To return or resign as investiture, seisin, or possession that has been received; to re-invest; to re-entfeoff. Burrill.

REVOKE. To recall; to make void; to repeal; to rescind. English.

RICHARD ROE, otherwise TROUBLE-SOME. The casual ejector and fictitious defendant in ejectment, whose services are no longer invoked. R. & L. See DOE, JOHN; ROE, RICHARD.

RICOHOME. In Spanish Law. A nobleman. English.

RIDGELING. A horse half castrated or from which but one testicle has been removed. English.

RIGA (L. Lat.). In Old European Law. A species of service and tribute rendered to their lords by agricultural tenants. Burrill.

RIGHT. See AFFECTED BY A PUBLIC INTEREST; EXCLUSIVE (Supp.).

RIGHT OF COMMON-LAW REMEDY. Within the Meaning of the Judicial Code, Section 24, Paragraph 3, vesting the district courts with exclusive jurisdiction of all civil causes of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction but saving to suitors the right of a common-law remedy. The "right of a common-law remedy" does not include attempted changes by the states in the substantive admiralty law, but it does include all means other than proceedings in admiralty which may be employed to enforce the right or to redress the injury involved. It includes remedies in pais, as well as proceedings in court; judicial remedies conferred by statute, as well as those existing at the common law; remedies in equity, as well as those enforceable in a court of law. 264 U. S. 123, 124; 237 U. S. 303; 177 U. S. 644.

RIGHT OF RELIEF. In Scotch Law. The right of a surety to claim from a debtor the payment of what he has paid for the debtor. English.

RIGHT OF TRIAL BY JURY. See TRIAL BY JURY (Supp.).

RIGHT TO REDEEM. Familiar terms to describe the estate of the debtor, when under mortgage, to be sold at auction, in contradistinction to an absolute estate, to be set off by appraisement. Really, it is the debtor's estate subject to mortgage. White vs. Whitney, 3 Metc. (Mass.) 81. Abbott. See REDEEM.

RINGING. Contracts of sales for future delivery which do not result in actual delivery but are settled by offsetting them with other contracts of the same kind. 262 U. S. 36; 198 U. S. 246, 247. See RING SETTLEMENT; DIRECT SETTLEMENT; MATCHING.

RINGING-UP. The putting into operation by brokers and commission merchants what is known as a ring. English. See RING.

RIOTOUS ASSEMBLY. In Old English Law. An assembly of twelve or more persons acting in a manner calculated to disturb the peace, and which refuses to disperse when requested to do so by the proper authority. English.

RISCUS. In Civil Law. A trunk. English.

RISK. See ASSUMPTION OF RISK; NEGLIGENCE, § CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE (Supp.).

RISTOURNE (Fr.). In Insurance Law. The dissolution of a policy or contract of insurance for any cause. Emerig. Tr. des Ass. ch. 16. Burrill.

RIVEARE. To enjoy the right of fishing or hunting on a river. English.

RIVER. See THENCE UP THE RIVER (Supp.).

RIVER BANK. Within the Meaning of the Treaty of 1819 between the United States and Spain, determining the boundary line between the states of Texas and Oklahoma. The bank intended by the treaty provision is the water-washed and relatively permanent elevation of acclivity at the outer line of the river bed which separates the bed from the adjacent upland, whether valley or hill, and serves to confine the waters within the bed and to preserve the course of the river. 260 U. S. 631, 632. See RIVER BED.

RIVER BED. Within the Meaning of the Treaty of 1819 between the United States and Spain, determining the boundary line between the states of Texas and Oklahoma. The bed includes all of the area which is kept practically bare of vegetation by the wash of the waters of the river from year to year in their onward course, although parts of it are left dry for months at a time; the bed excludes the lateral valleys which have the characteristics of relatively fast land and usually are covered by upland grasses and vegetation, although temporarily overflowed in exceptional instances when the river is at flood. 260 U. S. 632. See RIVER BANK (Supp.).

RIVETING. See WELDING (Supp.).

ROADSTEAD. In Maritime Law. A known general station for ships, notoriously used as such, and distinguished by the name; and not any spot where an anchor will find bottom and fix itself. 1 Rob. Adm. R. 232. Burrill.

ROBE. An old term for a ship's cargo. English. Meredith's Emerigon on Ins. 359, 360 note.

ROBERDSMEN. In Old English Law. Persons who, in reign of Richard I., committed great outrages on the borders of England and Scotland; said to have been the followers of Robert or Robin Hood. 4 Bl. Com. 245; 3 Inst. 197. Burrill.

ROD. A lineal measure of sixteen feet and a half, otherwise called a "perch." R. & L.

RODKNIGHTS. Mounted tenants who rode with the baron. English.

ROGARE. In Roman Law. To request; to request the enactment of a law; to adopt a law requested; to advocate such adoption. English.

ROGATIO TESTIUM. Requesting those present to be witnesses of a nuncupative will. English.

ROGO. In Roman Law. I ask. A common word in wills. Dig. 30, 108, 13, 14. Burrill.

ROMA PEDITAE. Those who anciently traveled to Rome on foot. English.

ROS. In Old English Law. Rushes which certain tenants were required to furnish to their lords. English.

ROSLAND. Heathy ground, or ground full of ling; also watery and moorish land. 1 Inst. 5. R. & L.

ROTHER BEASTS. In Old English Law. Horned cattle. Burrill.

ROTTEN BOROUGH. A borough which though sending a member to parliament had not sufficient population to warrant a representative in that body. English.

ROTULUS WINTONIAE. The rolls of Winton. The survey of England, alleged to have been made by King Alfred. English.

ROUND ROBIN. A circle divided from center, like Arthur's round table, whence its supposed origin. In each compartment is a signature, so entire circle when filled, exhibits a list, without priority to any name. R. & L.

RUBBER. See VULCANIZATION OF RUBBER; CURE (Supp.).

RUBBEROID. Like rubber. 220 U. S. 455.

RUINA (Lat.). In Civil Law. Ruin; the falling of a house. Dig. 47, 9. Burrill.

RUM. See BAY RUM (Supp.).

RUNDLET or RUNLET. A measure of wine, oil, etc., containing eighteen gallons and a half. 1 R. III. c. 13. R. & L.

RUNNING A CORNER. Consists in acquiring control of all or the dominant portion of a commodity with the purpose of artificially enhancing the price, one of the important features of which is the purchase for future delivery, coupled with a withholding from sale for a limited time. 226 U. S. 539, 540.

Relation to Competition. Running a corner may tend for a time to stimulate competition; but it also operates to thwart the usual operation of the laws of supply and demand, to withdraw the commodity from the normal current of trade, to enhance the price artificially, to hamper users and consumers in satisfying their needs, and to produce practically the same evils as does the suppression of competition. Id., 542.

RUNNING POLICY. See POLICY.

RUNNING WITH THE REVERSION. See COVENANT.

RUNRIG LANDS. In Scotland where the ridges of the fields belong alternately to different proprietors. Anciently this possession was advantageous in giving a united interest to tenants to resist inroads. By Act 1695, c. 23, a division of these lands was authorized with exception of lands belonging to corporations. Wharton; R. & L.

RURAL DEAN. In English Ecclesiastical Law. An ancient officer of the church, otherwise called bishop's dean. A kind of bishop's deputy, appointed to inspect the conduct of the parochial clergy, and clothed with inferior degree of judicial and coercive power. 1 Bl. Com. 383. Burrill.

RUSTICI. In Feudal Law. Natives of a conquered country. Fleta, lib. 2, tit. 27, §§9-11; 2 Bl. Com. 413.

In Old English Law. Inferior country tenants, churls, or chorls who held cottages by service of ploughing for the lord. Paroch. Antiq. 136. Burrill.

RYVIRE (L. Fr.). A river. Burrill.

S

S. C. Same Case; Select Cases; South Carolina; Supreme Court. English.

S. P. Sine prole, without issue. Same principle, or same point, indicating, when inserted between two citations of cases, that the second one involves the same doctrine as the first. R. & L.

SABURRA (L. Lat.). In Old Maritime Law. Ballast. Loccen. de Jur. Mar. lib. 2, c. 1, § 7. Burrill.

SACCABOR. See SACABURTH.

SACCULARII. In Roman Law. Cut-purses, or thieves who stole purses by cutting them from the victim's belt. English. 4 Bl. Com. 242; 4 Steph. (7th Edit.) 125.

SACCUS (L. Lat.). In Old English Law. A sack; a quantity of wool weighing thirty or twenty-eight stone. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 79, § 10. Burrill.

SACRA (Lat.). In the Roman Law. The right to participate in the sacred rites of the city. Butler's Hor. Jur. 27. Burrill.

SACRISTAN. An old term for sexton. English.

SADBERGE, SAEBERGE. A term applied to a part of the county palatine of Durham, England. English.

SAGAMAN. One who accuses secretly. English.

SAGAS DE LA LEY. Persons learned in the law; once applied to justices of the King's Bench, also to the Chancellor. English.

SAGIBARO, SACHBARO. A judge. Leg. Inoc. c. VI. R. & L.

SAIGA. In Old European Law. A coin valued at a penny. English.

SAILOR. See SEAMAN (Supp.).

SAINT-SIMONISM. An elaborate form of non-communitic socialism. Proposes unequal division of produce; varied occupations, graded by directing authority, paid by salary in proportion to importance. 1 Mill Pol. Ec. 258. R. & L.

SAKE. In Old English Law. A lord's right of americing his tenants in his court. Keilw. 145. Acquittance of suit at county courts and hundred courts. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 47, § 7. Burrill.

SALE. See CONDITIONAL SALE; CONTRACT OF SALE; FUTURES; SHORT SALE; SPOT SALES; WASH SALES (Supp.).

SALES TO ARRIVE. See SPOT SALES (Supp.).

SALET. In Old English Law. A steel head-piece or cap. English.

SALT DUTY IN LONDON. See GRAIN-AGE.

SALTSILVER. An old English tribute paid by tenants at the feast of St. Martin's for exemption from carrying salt from a market to the lord's manor. English.

SAND-GAVEL. A payment due to the lord of the manor of Rodley, in the county of Gloucester, for liberty granted to the tenants to dig sand for their common use. R. & L.

SANGUINE or MURREY. Heraldic term for blood-color; called in the arms of princes, "dragon's tail," and in those of lords "sardonyx." It is a tincture of very infrequent occurrence and not recognized by some writers. In engraving, denoted by numerous lines in saltire. Wharton; R. & L.

SARCULATURA (L. Lat.). In Old Records. Weeding corn; a tenant's service of weeding for the lord. Burrill.

SART. In Old English Law. A piece of woodland, turned into arable. Burrill.

SARUM (L. Lat.). In Old Records. The city of Salisbury in England. Burrill.

SASSE. In Old Law. A lock on a river. English.

SASSONS. A contemptuous term for the Saxons. English.

SAUNKEFIN. An old French term for failure of blood or direct heirs. English.

SAUSAGE. A food made up in some instances of the poorer classes of beef and pork, such as trimmings, hearts, ears, cheeks, liver, snouts, and tripe; but the preferred material is bull meat. Such meat, other than bull meat, is dry and has not the cohesive properties which will unite it when ground or minced into the mass popularly known as "sausage." For this reason, corn meal, potato flour, and other like substances have come to be used by the trade as "binders" to give it the desired cohesiveness and appearance. 249 U. S. 485, citing evidence. Corn meal or corn flour is resorted to to cheapen the product, as these products are cheaper than meat. Id., 478. The Meat Inspection Act of 1906 limits the use of cereal in sausage to two per cent; and limits the use of water or ice to three per cent, and for the purpose only to facilitate grinding, chopping, and mixing. Id.

SAVE. To exempt from; to preserve; to make note of; to bar. English.

SCABINI. In Old European Law. A judge. Assistants to the court where he sat judicially. English. Used for wardens at Lyn, Norfolk. Norf. Chart. Hen. VIII.

SCAPPELLARE. In Old European Law. To chop; to haggle over a sale. English.

SCHEME. In English Law. A scheme is a document containing provisions for regulating the management or distribution of property, or for making arrangements between persons who have conflicting rights. Tud. Char. Trusts, 257; Hunt. Eq. 248; Dan. Ch. Pr. 1765. R. & L.

SCISSIO (Lat.). In Old English Law. A cutting.

Scissio Auricularum. Cropping of the ears. An old punishment. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 38, § 10. Burrill.

SCOTS. In England, assessments levied by commissioners of sewers. English.

SCROLL. See SCRAWL.

SCROOP'S INN. An old London law society. English.

SCUTE. An old French coin valued at three shillings and four pence. English.

SEA WATCH. See WATCH (Supp.).

SEAMAN. Within the Meaning of the United States Statutes Applicable to "Merchant Seamen." Any person (masters and apprentices excepted) who shall be employed to serve in any capacity on board a vessel. Rev. Stats., section 4612; 245 U. S. 126, 127. A seaman may be called a "sailor" or a "mariner," but he is never called a "laborer." Id. See ALIEN SEAMEN (Supp.).

SEASHORE. That well defined area lying between the high-water mark and the low-water mark, of waters in which the tide daily ebbs and flows. The fact that by the English common law, and by the law of those states bounded by tidal waters, the public has rights in the seashore, and that grants extending only to the high-water mark of such waters nevertheless give access to the sea, accounts for the rule, generally recognized and followed, that a grant whose boundaries extend to the "shore" or "along the shore" of the sea, carries only to high-water mark. 271 U. S. 92; 13 How. 381; 6 Mass. 435; 5 Pick. 492; 2 Johns. 357. But the word "shore," even in its application to tidal waters, is subject to construction by the terms of the deed and surrounding circumstances, and may mean the water's edge at low-water mark. Id., 92, 93; 196 Mass. 198; 123 Mass. 359. See SHORE; TO THE SHORE (Supp.).

SEAWAN. Indian wampum, at one time used among certain American Indians as money. English.

SEAWORTHY. "It is obvious that there can be no fixed and positive standard of seaworthiness, but that it must vary with the varying exigencies of mercantile enterprise. 'The ship,' said Lord Cairns, 'should be in a condition to encounter whatever perils of the sea a ship of that kind, and laden in that way, may be fairly expected to encounter' on the voyage. 3 App. Cases, 72, 77."

"Again the class of vessel may be such as will not admit of being put into that condition of seaworthiness requisite in ordinary cases for the contemplated voyage. The effect of this is not to dispense with the implied warranty of seaworthiness, but to accommodate the warranty to what is reasonably practicable in the particular case. But the underwriter must be informed of the peculiar nature of the risk. Thus, if a steamer built for river navigation is to be sailed from this country to Calcutta or to Odessa, and the underwriter accept the risk with full information as to the class of vessel and the intended voyage, the assured is only required to make her as seaworthy for the voyage as is reasonably practicable with such a vessel by ordinary available means." 3 B. & S. 669; 34 Law Journal, Q. B. 46; 3 Aspinwall W. S. 433; 277 U. S. 76, quoting Arnold on Marine Insurance, Vol. 11, tenth English edition, section 710.

The term "seaworthiness" varies with the circumstances and the exceptional features of the risk known to both parties. Id., 80. This variation in the significance of "seaworthiness" when caused by exceptional circumstances known to both parties, applies as well to the meaning of "perils of the sea" as to that of seaworthiness. The two terms in such cases are correlative terms. Id., 2 F. (2d) 137, 139, 140. See DILIGENCE.

Unseaworthiness alone or deviation caused by it displaces the contract of affreightment only in so far as damage is caused by the unseaworthiness. 277 U. S. 331; 157 U. S. 124; 1 K. B. 660; A. C. 618.

SECONDHAND. Within the Meaning of an Act of the Legislature of Pennsylvania, Approved June 14, 1923, regulating the manufacture, sterilization, and sale of bedding. "Secondhand" means any material or article of which prior use has been made. 270 U. S. 409. See NEW; SHODDY (Supp.).

SECONDS. See FIRSTS (Supp.).

SECRETE. To conceal from or put beyond the reach of a creditor. English.

SECT. Adherents to a particular creed. English.

SECUNDUM. According to; following. Abbott.

SECURE. To make certain of payment or performance; to assure, guarantee, or indemnify. Abbott.

SECURITY DEED. In Georgia. A deed which has been executed conveying the legal title to land as security for the payment of a debt. 271 U. S. 633.

SED NON ALLOCATUR. But it is not allowed. A phrase used to indicate that the court did not agree with the contention of counsel. English.

SED PER CURIAM. But by the court. Expression sometimes found in the reports after the opinion of a single judge, to introduce that of the court which differs from that of the single judge. R. & L.

SEIGNIORESS. A female superior. R. & L.

SEISED IN HIS DEMESNE AS OF FEE. Words used to express complete ownership of the thing itself; seised in fee-simple. English.

SELDA (L. Lat.). In Old English Law. A window; a shop-window. Assis. Mensur. 9 Ric. 1.

A shop, shed, or stall. Cowell.
A wood of willows, willows, or withies. Co. Litt. 4b. Burrill.

SELF-MURDER. See SUICIDE.

SEMYNE'S CASE. A case decided during the reign of James I., in which it was held that every man's dwelling was his castle. English.

SEMINARIUM (Lat.). In the Civil Law. A nursery of trees. Dig. 7, 1, 9, 6. Burrill.

SEMI-PLENA PROBATIO (Lat.). In the Civil Law. Half-proof; half-proof. 3 Bl. Com. 370. Burrill.

SENDA. In Spanish Law. A path; the right of a path. Las Partidas, Part 3, tit. 31, 1, 3. The right of foot or horse path. White's New Recop. b. 2, tit. 6, ¶ 1. Burrill.

SENEUCIA (L. Lat.). In Old Records. Widowhood. Burrill.

SEPARATION OF PATRIMONY. The separation of property subject to certain debts from the property of the estate or heir; a practice permitted in Louisiana. English.

SEPARATISTS. Those who secede from the English church. English.

SEPE (Lat.). In Old English Law. A hedge or enclosure. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 41, ¶ 2. Burrill.

SEPTUAGESIMA. The third Sunday before Quadragesima Sunday in Lent, or 63 days before Easter, though so called because said to be before Lent, or seventy days before Easter. A period of seventy days. English.

SEPTUNX (Lat.). In Roman Law. A division of the as, containing seven unciae, or duodecimal parts; the proportion of seven-twelfths. Tayl. Civ. Law, 492; 2 Bl. Com. 462 note. Burrill.

SEQUELA (L. Lat.). In Old English Law. Suit, process, or prosecution. 2 Mon. Angl. 253. Burrill.

SERGEANT, SERJEANT. A title in England and the United States applied to various ministerial officers. Once, a person inferior to a knight who attended a nobleman. English.

SERMENT. In Old English Law. Oath. English.

SERRATED. In Old Practice. Marked or cut in notches, resembling the teeth of a saw. Some Roman coins were thus serrated, indented, as a security against forgery. Tac. de Mor. Germ. V. Burrill.

SERVANT. See EMPLOYEE, AS DISTINGUISHED FROM CONTRACTOR (Supp.).

SERVITOR. A serving man; particularly applied to students at Oxford, upon the foundation, who are similar to "sizars" at Cambridge. R. & L.

SERVITUDE. See SLAVERY; INVOLUNTARY SERVITUDE (Supp.).

SET UP. To allege as the ground or defence. English.

SET-OFF, RIGHT OF. The right which one party has against another to use his claim in full or partial satisfaction of what he owes to the other. That right is constantly exercised by business men in making book entries whereby one mutual debt is applied against another. 229 U. S. 528. If the parties have not voluntarily made the entries and suit is brought by one against the other, the defendant, to avoid a circuitry of action, may interpose his mutual claim by way of defence and if it exceeds that of the plaintiff, may recover for the difference. Id.

SETTLEMENT. Within the Meaning of the Homestead Law. Acts done on the land by way of establishing, or preparing to establish, an actual personal residence—going thereon and, with reasonable diligence, arranging to occupy it as a home, to the exclusion of one elsewhere. 270 U. S. 545. The law makes it plain that there must be a definite purpose "in good faith to obtain a home" by proceeding "faithfully and honestly" to comply with "all the requirements." A claim cannot be initiated by asserted acts of settlement which are only colorable and done with a purpose to hold the land for speculation or while maintaining an actual residence elsewhere. Id., 546.

SEVERABLE. Capable of being separated or divided. English.

SEXAGESIMA SUNDAY. The second Sunday before Lent. English.

SEXHINDMEN. The middle class among Saxons, valued at 600 shillings. English.

SEXTARY. In Old Records. An ancient measure of liquids, and of dry commodities; a quarter or ream. A quart. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 12, ¶ 11. Burrill.

SEXUAL INTERCOURSE. See CAR-NAL KNOWLEDGE.

SHARES OF STOCK. See CAPITAL STOCK (Supp.).

SHARP CLAUSE. A clause in an instrument writing giving a creditor authority to take some summary action upon default of performance or payment. English.

SHAW. In Old English Law. A wood. English.

SHAWATORES. An old term for soldiers. English.

SHEEP-SKIN. A deed; so called from the parchment it was written on. R. & L.

SHEEPWALK. A right of sheepwalk is same as fold-course. Elt. Com. 44; Cooke Incl. Jones vs. Richards, 6 Ad. & E. 530. R. & L.

SHELL. A definite article, constituted of materials of a certain kind and quality, assembled and filled and finished so as to be adequate for its destructive purposes. 251 U. S. 509.

SHEREFFE. The body of the lordship of Caerddiff, in South Wales, excluding the members of it. Pow. Hist. Wal. 123. R. & L.

SHEWERS. In England, those who take a jury to see a place, etc. English. Arch. Pr. 339, et seq.

SHODDY. Within the Meaning of an Act of the Legislature of Pennsylvania, Approved June 14, 1923, regulating the manufacture, sterilization, and sale of bedding. "Shoddy" means any material which has been spun into yarn, knit or woven into fabric, and subsequently cut up, torn up, broken up, or ground up. 270 U. S. 409. See COMFORTABLE; CUSHION; MATTRESS; PILLOW; SECONDHAND (Supp.).

SHORE. In the Treaty of Hartford, December 16, 1786, the words "shore" and "lake" were used synonymously, their choice being determined by convenience of expression. In each instance the margin of the lake was intended, and it was not meant by the particular use of these phrases to exclude "the shore" from the grant. 271 U. S. 92. See SEASHORE; TO THE SHORE (Supp.).

SHORT SALE. A contract for the sale of shares of stock which the seller does not own or the certificates for which are not within his control so as to be available for delivery at the time when, under the rules of the exchange, delivery must be made. 269 U. S. 450, 451. The loan of stock is usually, though not necessarily, incidental to a "short sale." Id.

The completed short sale transaction usually involves four separate steps in each of which there is either a sale or a complete transfer of all the legal elements of ownership. These are: (1) The sale of the stock by the person effecting the short sale, followed by the transfer and delivery of the certificates for the borrowed stock to the purchaser's broker; (2) the transfer of the shares from the lender to the borrower, who uses them for delivery on the customer's short sale; (3) the purchase by the borrowing broker of the stock required to repay the loan; and (4) the transfer and delivery by the borrower to the lender of the certificates for the purchased shares to replace the shares borrowed. Each transfer may be accompanied by a physical delivery of certificates of the stock transferred; but the intermediate deliveries in (2) and (3) are usually eliminated by use of the Stock Exchange Clearing House. Id., 453. See LOAN TICKET (Supp.).

SHOW CAUSE. When an order, rule, decree, or the like, has been made nisi, the person who appears before the court and contends that it should not be allowed to take effect, is said to show cause against it. R. & L.

SHRIEVALTY. The office of sheriff; the period of that office. R. & L.

SPECIAL TERM. Within the Meaning of Section 670 Rev. Stat. A session ordered for the disposal of business, supplementary to a regular term, and held at the place fixed by congress for holding such regular term. 204 U. S. 457. It has been the uniform practice of congress to fix both the time and place for holding sessions of the district and circuit courts of the United States, which, for convenience of expression, have been styled the regular terms of court. Rev. Stat., secs. 572, 658; 204 U. S. 455. Upon the district judge has been conferred the power of designating the time and place of holding special terms of the district court, in which any business might be transacted which might be disposed of at a regular term. Id., 455, 456.

SPECIFIC JOB CONTRACT. A form of contract in common use by manufacturers of cement whereby cement is sold for future delivery for use in a specific piece of construction which is described in the contract. 268 U. S. 594. Contracts whereby a manufacturer is to deliver in the future, cement to be used in a specific piece of work, such as a particular building or road, and the obligation is that the manufacturer shall furnish and the contractor shall take only such cement as is required for or used for the specific purpose. Id. These contracts have, by universal practice, been treated by cement manufacturers as, in effect, free options customarily made and acted upon on the understanding that the purchaser is to pay nothing until after the delivery of the cement to him; that he is not obligated in any event to take the cement contracted for unless he chooses to; that he is not held to the price named in the contract in the event of a decline in the market price; whereas the manufacturer may be held to the contract price if the market advances and may be held for the delivery of the full amount of cement required for the completion of the particular piece of construction described in the contract. The practical effect and operation of the specific job contract therefore is to enable contractors who are bidding upon construction work to secure a call or option for the cement required for the completion of that particular job at a price which may not be increased, but may be reduced if the market declines. It enables contractors to bid for future construction work with the assurance that the requisite cement will be available at a definitely ascertained maximum price.

In view of the option features of the contract referred to, the contractor is involved in no business risk if he enter into several specific job contracts with several manufacturers for the delivery of cement for a single specific job. The manufacturer, however, is under no moral or legal obligation to supply cement except such as is required for the specific job. If, therefore, the contractor takes advantage of his position and of the peculiar form of the specific job contract, as modified by the custom of the trade, to secure deliveries from each of several manufacturers of the full amount of cement required for the particular job, he in effect secures the future delivery of cement not required for the particular job, which he is not entitled to receive, while the manufacturer is under no legal or moral obligation to deliver and which presumably he would not deliver if he had information that it was not to be used in accordance with his contract. Id., 595. See CEMENT; CHECKERS (Supp.).

SPECULUM (Lat.). Mirror or looking-glass. The title of several of the most ancient law books or compilations. Barringt. Obs. Stat. 1, 2, note b. Burrill.

SURPLUS. Within the Meaning of Revenue Act, 1918, Title III. As commonly employed in corporate accounting, denotes an excess in the aggregate value of all the assets of a corporation over the sum of all its liabilities, including capital stock. 275 U. S. 218; 269 U. S. 214; 218 Fed. 908. See UNDIVIDED PROFITS; INVESTED CAPITAL. Aside from the fact that a surplus may not only be "earned," as where it is derived from undistributed profits, but "paid in," as where the stock is issued at a price above par, the distinction between these terms, as commonly employed, is that the term "surplus" describes such part of the excess in the value of the corporate assets as is treated by the corporation as part of its permanent capital, usually carried on the books in a separate "surplus account"; while the term "undivided profits" designates such part of the excess as consists of profits "which have neither been distributed as dividends nor carried to surplus account." Id.; 269 U. S. 214. But it is prerequisite to the existence of "undivided profits" as well as a "surplus," that the net assets of the corporation exceed the capital stock. Id.

A term commonly employed in corporate finance and accounting to designate an account on corporate books. (But this is not true of the words "undivided profits.") The surplus account represents the net assets of a corporation in excess of all liabilities including its capital stock. This surplus may be "paid-in surplus," as where the stock is issued at a price above par. It may be "earned surplus," as where it was derived wholly from undistributed profits. Or it may, among other things, represent the increase in valuation of land, or other assets made upon a revaluation of the company's fixed property. 269 U. S. 214.

Within the Meaning of Section 31 (b), Added by the Revenue Act of 1917 to the Revenue Act of 1916, providing that "any distribution made to the shareholders of a corporation in the year nineteen hundred and seventeen, or subsequent tax years, shall be deemed to have been made from the most recently accumulated undivided profits or surplus, etc." The term undoubtedly means that part of the surplus which was derived from profits which, at the close of earlier annual accounting periods, were carried into the surplus account as undistributed profits. Id.

TIDSMEN. English custom officers who board ship to see that duties are paid. They were so called because on the Thames they boarded ships at the mouth of the river and came up on them with the tide. English.

TIE-PLATE. A railroad tie-plate, sometimes called a "wear-plate," is a rectangular piece of metal, originally with both surfaces flat, designed to be placed upon the tie immediately under the rail, for the purpose of protecting the tie from the wear, which in soft wood is very great, incident to the vibration of the rail caused by passing engines and trains and for the purpose of holding the rail more firmly in place than it could otherwise be held by the spikes without the plate, thereby preserving the gauge of the track.

In the early days of railroading, when engines and cars were small and light, when speed was comparatively slow, and when hardwood, which held the spikes firmly in place, was abundant and cheap, such plates were little used; but the increase in weight of rails and rolling stock, the higher speed of trains and the necessary use of the cheaper soft woods for ties have brought them into extensive use. The general use of these plates with heavy rolling stock and traffic presented the problem of making them as strong and inexpensive as possible and in a form such that they would adhere firmly to the ties while doing the least possible damage to the fiber of the wood. 244 U. S. 287.

TIE-SLASH. A term used to describe the tops of trees, the bodies of which have been used for making railroad ties. 250 U. S. 18.

TO A PATIENT. Within the Meaning of Section 2 (a) of the Narcotic Law of 1914, providing that it is unlawful for any persons to sell, give away, etc., any of the drugs mentioned in the act, etc., but does not apply to the dispensing or distribution of the drugs to a patient by a physician, registered under this act in the course of his professional practice only. The phrases "to a patient" and "in the course of his professional practice only" are intended to confine the immunity of a registered physician, in dispensing the narcotic drugs mentioned in the act, strictly within the appropriate bounds of a physician's professional practice, and not to extend it to include a sale to a dealer or a distribution intended to cater to the appetite or satisfy the craving of one addicted to the use of the drug. A "prescription" issued for either of the latter purposes protects neither the physician who issues it nor the dealer who knowingly accepts and fills it. 268 U. S. 20, quoting 254 U. S. 194.

TRADE. See BOARD OF TRADE (Supp.).

TRADE-MARK. A distinctive mark of authenticity, through which the products of particular manufacturers or the vendible commodities of particular merchants may be distinguished from those of others. It may consist in any symbol or in any form of words, but as its office is to point out distinctively the origin or ownership of the articles to which it is affixed, it follows that no sign or form of words can be appropriated as a valid trade-mark, which from the nature of the fact conveyed by its primary meaning, others may employ with equal truth, and with equal right, for the same purpose. 220 U. S. 453, quoting 179 U. S. 673. See also 272 U. S. 629. See TRADE NAME (Supp.).

A trade-mark is not only a symbol of an existing good will, although it commonly is thought of only as that. Primarily it is a distinguishable token devised or picked out with the intent to appropriate it to a particular class of goods and with the hope that it will come to symbolize good will. Apart from nice and exceptional cases, and within the limits of the jurisdiction of the United States Supreme Court, a trade-mark and a business may start together, and in a qualified sense the mark is property, protected and alienable, although as with other property its outline is shown only by the law of torts, of which the right is a prophetic summary. 273 U. S. 632; 250 U. S. 29.

TRADE NAME. As Distinguished from "Trade-Mark." To some extent the two terms overlap, but there is a difference more or less definitely recognized, which is, that, generally speaking, "trade-mark" is applicable to the vendible commodity to which it is affixed, and "trade name" to a business and its good will. 269 U. S. 380; 194 N. Y. 434-435. A corporate name seems to fall more appropriately into the latter class. But the precise difference is not often material, since the law affords protection against its appropriation in either view upon the same fundamental principles. The effect of assuming a corporate name by a corporation under the law of its creation is to exclusively appropriate that name. It is an element of the corporation's existence. Id.; 18 Fed. Cases 38, Case No. 10,144.

The general doctrine is that equity not only will enjoin the appropriation and use of a trade-mark or trade name where it is completely identical with the name of the corporation, but will enjoin such appropriation and use where the resemblance is so close as to be likely to produce confusion as to such identity, to the injury of the corporation to which the name belongs. Id., 381; 81 N. J. Eq. 458; 21 R. I. 115. See TRADE-MARK (Supp.).

TRAINBANDS. Militia. English.

TRANSACTION. This is a word of flexible meaning. It may comprehend a series of many occurrences, depending not so much upon the immediateness of their connection as upon their logical relationship. 270 U. S. 610.

TRANSFER. In Bankruptcy Law. Includes the sale and every other and different mode of disposing of or parting with property, or the possession of property, absolutely or conditionally, as a payment, pledge, mortgage, gift, or security. 225 U. S. 184, quoting sec. 1 (25) of the Bankruptcy Act. See PREFERENCE; ACCOUNTS RECEIVABLE (Supp.).

Within the Meaning of the California Inheritance Tax Act, imposing a tax "upon the transfer of any property" of the character described in the act. The word "transfer" includes the passing of any property or any interest therein (in the manner provided in the act). 268 U. S. 144.

There are two elements in every transfer of a decedent's estate; the one is the exercise of the legal power to transmit at death; the other is the privilege of succession. Id.

TRANSFERENCE. In Scotch Law. The term applied to an action by which a suit pending at time a party died is transferred from the deceased to his representatives, in same condition in which it stood formerly. In the United States called continuance. Abbott.

TRANSIT. Within the Meaning of the Act of Congress of March 4, 1915, Second Proviso. In the ordinary and usual meaning of the word, "transit" ends before delivery at destination. Loading precedes, and unloading follows, transit. 269 U. S. 162. The context of this act shows that the phrase, "in transit," was not intended to mean at any time after the property has been received by the initial carrier and before delivery in accordance with the contract of carriage. Id., 161. See DAMAGE IN TRANSIT (Supp.).

TRANSLADO. A Spanish word meaning a transcript. English.

TRANSPORT. To convey from one place to another; to convey a criminal to a penal colony. A vessel for the transfer of convicts, soldiers, or military supplies. An old New York term for a conveyance. English.

TRANSPORTATION COMPANY. Within the Meaning of the Auto Stage and Truck Transportation Act of California, c. 213, Statutes of California, 1917, providing for the supervision and regulation of transportation for compensation over public highways by automobiles, auto trucks, etc., by the railroad commission. The term "transportation company" is defined to mean a common carrier for compensation over any public highway between fixed termini or over a regular route. 271 U. S. 589.

In 1919, the act was amended so as to bring under the regulative control of the commission automotive carriers of persons or property operating under private contracts of carriage; and the term "transportation company" was enlarged so as to include such a carrier. Id., 590.

TRANSPUMPTS. In Scotch Law. An action competent to anyone having a partial interest in a writing, or use of it, to support his title or defences in other actions. Directed against the custodian of writing, calling upon him to exhibit it that a transsumps or copy may be judicially made and delivered to the pursuer. Bell's Dict. R. & L.

TRASSANS. One who draws a bill of exchange. English.

Trassatus. One on whom it is drawn.

TRAVEL. To go from one place to another at a distance; to journey; spoken of voluntary change of place. Abbott.

TRAVERSER. One who files a traverse. English.

TREACHER, TREACHOUR. A traitor. English.

TREAD-MILL or TREAD-WHEEL. Instrument of prison discipline. Wheel or cylinder with a horizontal axis, with steps up which prisoners walk and put axle in motion.

Men hold on by a fixed rail; as their weight presses down the step upon which they tread, they ascend the next step, and thus drive the wheel. Encycl. Brit. Abbott.

TREATY. A treaty made under the authority of the United States "shall be the supreme law of the land, and the judges in every state shall be bound thereby, anything in the constitution or laws of any state to the contrary notwithstanding." 265 U. S. 341, quoting Constitution, Art. VI, section 2.

The treaty-making power of the United States is not limited by any express provision of the constitution, and, though it does not extend "so far as to authorize what the constitution forbids," it does extend to all proper subjects of negotiation between our government and other nations, including that of promoting friendly relations by establishing rules of equality between foreign subjects while here and native citizens. Id.; 252 U. S. 416; 140 U. S. 463; 133 U. S. 266, 267.

A rule of equality thus established stands on the same footing of supremacy as do the provisions of the constitution and laws of the United States. It operates of itself without the aid of any legislation, state or national. Id.; 213 U. S. 272; 124 U. S. 194; 112 U. S. 50; 112 U. S. 598; 2 Pet. 314.

A treaty is to be liberally construed; when two constructions are possible, one restrictive of rights that may be claimed under it and the other favorable to them, the latter is to be preferred. Id., 342; 183 U. S. 437; 133 U. S. 271; 100 U. S. 487.

According to the constitution, a treaty is only a proposal until approved by the senate. 251 U. S. 167.

TREBELLANIC PORTION. In Civil Law. That portion an instituted heir, charged with a trust, could detain. English.

TREMAGIUM, TREMESIUM, TREMISSIUM. The season or time of sowing summer corn, about March, the third month, to which the word may allude. Cowell; R. & L.

TRESTORNARE (L. Lat.). In Old English Law. To turn aside; to divert a stream from its course. Bract. fol. 115, 234b. Burrill.

TRESVIRI (Lat.). In Roman Law. Officers who had the charge of prisons and the execution of condemned criminals. Calv. Lex. Burrill.

TRET (L. Fr.). A drawing or draught; the drawing of a net. Brit. c. 72, 103. Drawn as juror. Yearb. H. 3 Hen. VI. 3. Burrill.

In Old English Law. Fine wheat. English.

TRIA CAPITA. In Roman Law. Citizenship, freedom, and family rights. English.

TRIAL. The examination of the matters of fact in issue. 221 U. S. 538, quoting 3 Bl. Com. 350. A common-law term, commonly used to denote that step in an action by which issues or questions of fact are decided. Id., 539, quoting 18 Fed. Rep. 616. But the word has often a broader significance, as referring to that final examination and decision of matter of law as well as fact, for which every antecedent step is a preparation, which we commonly denominate "the trial." 221 U. S. 539. (Many cases are cited for this definition in 28 Am. & Eng. Ency., p. 636.)

TRIAL BY JURY. In the trial by jury, the right to which is secured by the seventh amendment, both the court and the jury are essential factors. To the former is committed a power of direction and superintendence, and to the latter the ultimate determination of the issues of fact. Only through the co-operation of the two, each acting within its appropriate sphere, can the constitutional right be satisfied. And so, to dispense with either or to permit one to disregard the province of the other is to impinge on that right. 228 U. S. 382.

Whether in a given case there is a right to a trial by jury is to be determined by an inspection of the pleadings and not by an examination of the evidence. If the pleadings present material issues of fact, either party is entitled to have them tried to the court and a jury, and this is as true of a second trial as of the first. Whether the evidence is sufficient to sustain a verdict for one party or the other is quite another matter and does not affect the mode of trial, but only the duty of the court in instructing the jury and of the latter in giving their verdict. The issues to which the jury must respond are those presented by the pleadings, and this whether the evidence be disputed or undisputed and whether it be ample or meager. Id., 398.

TRIBE. As Distinguished from "Band" or "Nation." The North American Indians do not and never have constituted "nations" as that word is used by writers upon international law, although in a great number of treaties they are designated as "nations" as well as tribes. Indeed, in negotiating with the Indians the terms "nation," "tribe," and "band" are used almost interchangeably. The word "nation" as ordinarily used presupposes or implies an independence of any other sovereign power more or less absolute, an organized government, recognized officials, a system of laws, definite boundaries and the power to enter into negotiations with other nations. These characteristics the Indians have possessed only in a limited degree, and when used in connection with the Indians, especially in their original state, we must apply to the word "nation" a definition which indicates little more than a large tribe or a group of official tribes possessing a common government, language or racial origin, and acting for the time being, in concert. Owing to the natural infirmities of the Indian character, their fiery tempers, impatience of restraint, their mutual jealousies and animosities, their nomadic habits, and lack of mental training, they have as a rule shown a total want of that cohesive force necessary to the making up of a nation in the ordinary sense of the word. As they had no established laws, no recognized method of choosing their sovereigns by inheritance or election, no officers with defined powers, their governments in their original state were nothing more than a temporary submission to an intellectual or physical superior, who in some cases ruled with absolute authority, and in others, was recognized only so long as he was able to dominate the tribe by the qualities which originally enabled him to secure their leadership. In short, the word "nation" as applied to the uncivilized Indians is so much of a misnomer as to be little more than a compliment. 180 U. S. 265.

By a "tribe" is understood a body of Indians of the same or a similar race, united in a community under one leadership or government, and inhabiting a particular though sometimes ill-defined territory; by a "band" is understood a company of Indians not necessarily, though often, of the same race or tribe, but united under the same leadership in a common design. While a "band" does not imply the separate racial origin characteristic of a tribe, of which it is usually an offshoot, it does imply a leadership and a concert of action. Id., 266.

TRICESIMA. An ancient custom in the borough in the county of Hereford, so called because thirty burgesses paid 1d. rent for their houses to the bishop, who was the lord of the manor. Lib. Nik. Heref. R. & L.

TRIDING-MOTE. A court held in a trithing. English.

TRIDUUM. In Old English Law. The period of three days. English.

TRIENS. A third part.

In the Feudal Law. A third dower.

In Roman Law. Four unciae; a coin equal to one-third of an as. English. See AS.

TRISTRIS (L. Lat.). In Old Forest Law. A freedom from the duty of attending the lord of a forest when engaged in the chase. Spelman; Burrill.

TRITAVIA (L. Lat.). In the Civil Law. A great-grandfather's great-grandmother. Inst. 3, 6, 4. Burrill.

TROPHY MONEY. Money formerly collected and raised in London, and the several counties of England, toward providing harness and the maintenance of the militia, etc. R. & L.

TRUST. An organization for the control of several corporations under one direction by the device of a transfer by the stockholders in each corporation of at least a majority of the stock to a central committee or board of trustees, who issue in return to such stockholders respectively certificates showing in effect that, although they have parted with their stock and the consequent voting power, they are still entitled to dividends or to share in the profits—the object being to enable the trustees to elect directors in all the corporations, to control and suspend at pleasure the work of any, and thus to economize expenses, regulate production, and defeat competition. In a looser sense the term is applied to any combination of establishments in the same line of business for securing the same ends by holding the individual interests of each subservient to a common authority for the common interests of all. 238 U. S. 53, quoting the Century Dict. See MASSACHUSETTS TRUST (Supp.).

TRUST ALLOTMENT. There are two modes by which Indians are prevented from improvidently disposing of their allotments. (1) One is by means of a certificate, called a trust patent, by the terms of which the government holds the land for a period of years in trust for the allottee with an agreement to convey at the end of the trust period. (2) The other mode is to issue a patent conveying to the allottee the land in fee but prohibiting its alienation for a stated period. Both have the same effect so far as the power of alienation is concerned, but one is commonly called a trust allotment and the other a restricted allotment. 271 U. S. 470; 256 U. S. 486.

TRUST PATENT. See TRUST ALLOTMENT (Supp.).

TRUSTEE. The distinction between a trustee under a conventional deed of trust for the benefit of creditors and a trustee in bankruptcy is that the former has no power to vacate preferences. 276 U. S. 12; 198 U. S. 91; 196 U. S. 516.

TRUSTEE IN BANKRUPTCY. See TRUSTEE (Supp.).

TRUSTOR. One who creates a trust. English.

TUCHAS. In Spanish Law. Objections or exceptions to witnesses. White's New Recop. b. 3, tit. 7, c. 10. Burrill.

TUERTO. In Spanish Law. Tort. Las Partidas, Part 7, tit. 6, l. 5. Burrill.

TURBA (L. Lat.). In Old English Law. A turf or sod, a cut of earth. Spelman; Burrill.

TURNED TO A RIGHT. Words applied to an entry on land which requires the owner to proceed at law to regain possession. English.

TWA NIGHT GEST. In Saxon Law. One who remained two nights at an inn or house of another. English. LL. Edw. Conf. c. 17; Bract. fol. 124b; Britt. c. 12.

TYHTLAN. An accusation. English.

TYLWITH. A tribe; house; or family. Cowell; R. & L.

TYMBORELLA. Cucking-stool. English.

TYRRA or TOIRA. A mount or hill. Cowell; R. & L.

TYRRELL'S CASE. A case decided in England in 1557, which revived and increased the jurisdiction of equity over trusts which had ceased after the passage of the Statute of Uses. English.

TYTHING. A company of ten; a district; a tenth part. R. & L. See TITHING.

TZAR, TZARINA. See CZAR (Supp.).

U

UBI REVERA (Lat.). Where in reality; where in truth, or in point of fact. Cro. Elis. 645. Burrill.

UBIQUITY. Presence in all parts of a territory, as the sovereignty of a state; valid everywhere. English.

UNAPPROPRIATED PUBLIC LANDS. The Homestead Law accords to every person of stated qualifications the privilege of acquiring title to a quarter section, or less, of "unappropriated public lands" by settling thereon and continuously residing on, improving and cultivating the same for a prescribed period. The original law was confined to surveyed lands; afterwards a provision was added permitting claims to be initiated as respects either surveyed or unsurveyed lands under certain conditions. 270 U. S. 545. See SETTLEMENT.

UNCIA (Lat.). In Old English Law. An ounce; the twelfth part of a pound. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 12, §1. Burrill.

UNCIA AGRI, UNCIA TERRAE. Phrases often in charters of British kings. Signify some measure or quantity of land; said to have been twelve modii, each modius possibly one hundred feet square. 3 Mon. Angl. 198. Jacob; R. & L.

UNCONTROLLABLE IMPULSE. See INSANITY.

UNCUTH. In Saxon Law. Unknown; a stranger. A person entertained in the house of another was, on the first night of his entertainment, so called. Bract. fol. 124b. Burrill.

UNDER CURED. See CURE (Supp.).

UNDER THE EYE OR WITHIN THE VIEW OF THE COURT. In open court. 267 U. S. 535. See IN THE PRESENCE OF THE COURT; IN OPEN COURT (Supp.).

UNDER-TUTOR. One who is sometimes appointed to look after the interest of a ward who has a tutor, where there is danger of conflict of interests between tutor and ward. English.

UNDIVIDED PROFITS. Earnings or profits which have not been divided among the partners in a firm or the stockholders in a corporation. 269 U. S. 214, footnote, quoting the Committee on Accounting Terminology of the American Association of Public Accountants.

As Used by Incorporated Banks. The term is commonly employed to designate the account in which profits are carried more or less temporarily, in contradistinction to the account called "surplus" (q. v.) in which are carried amounts treated as permanent capital, and which may have been derived from payments for stock in excess of par, or from profits which have been definitely devoted to use as capital. 269 U. S. 215, footnote; 259 U. S. 308.

As Used in Corporate Finance and Accounting. The term has not acquired a fixed meaning like the term "surplus." It is not known as designating generally in business an account on the corporation's books, as distinguished from profits actually earned but not distributed. Few business corporations establish an "undivided profits" account. By most corporations the term "undivided profits" is employed to describe profits which have neither been distributed as dividends nor carried to surplus account upon the closing of the books; that is, current undistributed earnings. 269 U. S. 214, 215.

Within the Meaning of Section 31 (b), Added by the Revenue Act of 1917 to the Revenue Act of 1916, providing that "any distribution made to the shareholders of a corporation in the year nineteen hundred and seventeen, or subsequent tax years, shall be deemed to have been made from the most recently accumulated undivided profits or surplus, etc." That this is the meaning (as used in corporate finance and accounting, supra) in which it was used by congress is confirmed by the use of the expression "earnings and profits" later in the same paragraph, and also by the use of the term "undivided profits" in section 207 (which deals with the War Excess Profits Tax on corporations and makes the tax dependent on the amount of the invested capital). Id., 216 and footnote. See SURPLUS.

Within the Meaning of Revenue Act, 1918, Title III. The term "undivided profits" is employed in its ordinary meaning of an excess in the aggregate value of the assets of a corporation over the sum of its liabilities, including capital stock. 275 U. S. 218; 269 U. S. 214; 218 Fed. 908. Therefore, profits earned by a corporation which were insufficient to offset an impairment of its paid-in capital were not "undivided profits," to be included as "invested capital" in computing the excess-profits credits allowed by the act. Id. See INVESTED CAPITAL (Supp.).

UNDRES. In Old English Law. Minors, or persons under age, not fit to bear arms. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 9, §4. Cowell; Burrill.

UNEARNED PREMIUM. See RESERVE FUNDS (Supp.).

UNFAIR HEARING. To render a hearing unfair, the defect, or the practice complained of, must have been such as might have led to a denial of justice, or there must have been absent one of the elements deemed essential to due process. 263 U. S. 157; 253 U. S. 459; 208 U. S. 8. A hearing granted does not cease to be fair, merely because rules of evidence and of procedure applicable in judicial proceedings have not been strictly followed by the executive; or because some evidence has been improperly rejected or received. Id.; 223 U. S. 681.

UNFAIR METHODS OF COMPETITION. See COMPETITION, UNFAIR METHODS OF (Supp.).

UNIGENITURE. The condition of being the only one begotten. English.

UNINCORPORATED ASSOCIATION. Within the Meaning of the Revenue Act of 1918. Unincorporated joint stock associations, although technically partnerships under the law of many states, are not in common parlance referred to as such. They have usually a fixed capital stock divided into shares represented by certificates transferable only upon the books of the company, manage their affairs by a board of directors and executive officers, and conduct their business in the general form and mode of procedure of a corporation. Because of this resemblance in form and effectiveness, these unincorporated associations are "corporations" within the definition of the Revenue Act of 1918. 269 U. S. 113. See CORPORATION; PARTNERSHIP (Supp.).

UNIO (Lat.). In Canon Law. A consolidation of two churches into one. Cowell; Burrill.

UNION. The union of states, equal in power, dignity, and authority, each competent to exert that residuum of sovereignty not delegated to the United States by the constitution itself. 221 U. S. 567. See STATE (Supp.).

UNION JACK. National flag of Great Britain and Ireland. Combines banner of St. Patrick with crosses of St. George and St. Andrew. Jack possibly derived from jacque surcoat used by English soldiery. Abbott.

UNION OF CHURCHES. Combining and consolidating two churches into one. Also when one church is made subject to another, and one man rector of both; and where a conventual church is made a cathedral. Tomlins; Abbott.

UNITAS PERSONARUM. The unity of persons; as applied to husband and wife, ancestor and heir, etc. English.

UNITED STATES BONDS. Obligations for payment of money which have been at various times issued by the government of the United States. Abbott.

UNIVERSUS (Lat.). The whole; all together. Burrill.

UNKOUTH. Unknown. The L. Fr. form of the Sax. uncouth. Britt. c. 12. Burrill.

UNLARICH. In Old Scotch Law. That which is done without law or against law. Spelman; Burrill.

UNLAWFUL ADVANTAGE. See CONCESSION (Supp.).

UNLAWFUL CONCESSION. See CONCESSION (Supp.).

UNLAWFUL DISCRIMINATION. See CONCESSION (Supp.).

UNNATURAL OFFENCE. Buggery. English.

UNO FLATU (Lat.). In one breath. 3 M. & Gr. 45; 3 Story's R. 504. Burrill.

UNQUES PRIST (L. Fr.). Always ready. Cowell; Burrill.

UNSEAWORTHINESS. See SEAWORTHY (Supp.).

UNTHRIFT. A prodigal; a spendthrift. 1 Bl. Com. 306. Burrill.

UNUS NULLUS RULE, THE. In Civil Law. The doctrine that the testimony of one witness is equal to none. English.

URBAN HOMESTEAD. See HOMESTEAD.

USE. As Distinguished from Ownership. The right to use is one of the elements involved in ownership. Ownership, however, may exist without use having taken place. 232 U. S. 280.

Within the Meaning of Section 37 of the Tariff Act of 1909, imposing a tax on the use of foreign-built yachts. The word "use" means more than the mere privilege of using which the owner enjoys, and relates to its primary signification, as defined by Webster: "The act of employing anything or of applying it to one's service; the state of being so employed or applied." Use, although it arises from ownership, is active (objective), that is, it is the outward and distinct exercise of a right which ownership confers but which would not necessarily be exerted by the mere fact of ownership. Id., 281. See BENEFICIAL USE.

USHER OF THE BLACK ROD. Officer of house of lords appointed by letters-patent from the crown. He calls attendance of commons in house of peers when royal assent is given to bills either by queen in person or commission; executes orders for commitment of those guilty of breach of privilege; assists the introduction of peers when they take the oaths and their seats. Abbott.

USO. In Spanish Law. Usage; that which arises from certain things said or done for long time without hindrance. Las Partidas, Part 1, tit. 2, 1, 1. Burrill.

USUARIUS (Lat.). In Civil Law. One who had the mere use of a thing belonging to another, for the purpose of supplying his daily wants; an usuary. Dig. 7, 8, 10, Pr. Burrill.

USUCAPIO. In Roman Law. A mode of acquiring property by possession for a certain period; which possession must have been obtained in good faith and under some method of transfer which, though legal, did not confer title. English. 2 Bl. Com. 264, note (f).

USURPATIO (Lat.). In the Civil Law. The interruption of a usucaption, by some act on the part of the real owner. Dig. 41, 3, 2. Burrill.

USUS BELLICI (Lat.). In International Law. Warlike uses, or objects. 1 Kent's Com. 141. Burrill.

UTERO-GESTATION. See GESTATION.

UTERQUE. One of them. English.

UTI (Lat.). In Civil Law. To use; strictly; to use for necessary purposes as distinguished from frui, to enjoy. Heinecc. Elem. Jur. Civ. lib. 2, tit. 4, §415. Burrill.

UTI FRUI. To have full use and enjoyment of a thing, without damage to its substance. Hence term usufructus. Burrill.

UTI ROGAS (Lat., as you ask). In Roman Law. The form of words by which a vote in favor of a proposed law was orally expressed. Adams' Rom. Ant. 98, 100. Burrill.

UTILIDAD. In Spanish Law. The profit of a thing. White's New Recop. b. 2, tit. 2, chap. 1. Burrill.

UTILIS (Lat.). In Civil Law. Useful; beneficial; equitable; available. Calv. Lex. Burrill.

VACATURA. The avoidance of a benefice. English.

VACUA POSSESSIO. A vacant possession. English.

VACUUS (Lat.). In Old English Law. Empty; void; vacant; unoccupied. Calv. Lex. Burrill.

VADES (Lat.). In Civil Law. Pledges; sureties; bail; security for the appearance of a defendant or criminal in court. Calv. Lex.

VADIARE DUELLUM (L. Lat.). In Old Scotch and English Law. To wage or gage the duelling; to wage battle; to give pledges mutually for engaging in the trial by combat. Bract. fol. 157. Burrill.

VADLET. The king's eldest son; hence the valet or knave follows the king and queen in a pack of cards. Barr. Stat. 344. R. & L.

VADUUM (Lat.). In Old Records. A ford, or wading-place. Cowell; Burrill.

VALUATION. See TENTATIVE VALUATION (Supp.).

VALUE. See GOING VALUE; REAL PROPERTY; RENTAL VALUE; REPRODUCTION VALUE (Supp.).

VAS. In Civil Law. A pledge; a surety. English.

VASTUM. Waste. A common open to all tenants alike. English.

VAUDERIE. An old European term for witchcraft. English.

VEAL-MONEY. Tenants of manor of Bradford, in county of Wilts, paid a yearly rent by this name to their lord, in lieu of veal paid formerly in kind. Bract; R. & L.

VECORIN. Highway robbery. An old Lombard term for forestalling. English.

VECTIGAL JUDICIARIUM. In Old English Law. Taxes paid to maintain courts of justice. English.

VEIES. A law French term for such distresses as could not be replevied. Refusing to return cattle distrained. English.

VELITIS JUBEATIS QUIRITES? Is it your will or pleasure, Romans? The form of proposing a law to the Roman people. Tayl. Civ. Law, 155. Burrill.

VENARIA. In Old English Law. Animals set apart for hunting, as hares, partridges, etc., not animals of forest but field. Burrill.

VENATIO (L. Lat.). In Old English Law. The chase, or hunt. Prey taken in chase; venison. Burrill.

VEND. To part with a thing for a consideration. 229 U. S. 13.

VENDER. See ITINERANT VENDER (Supp.).

VENEERING. See ANIMAL GLUE (Supp.).

VEREBOT. An old Saxon term for a transport vessel. English.

VERGELT. In Saxon Law. A fine for committing a crime. English.

VERGENS AD INOPIAM. Verging toward poverty.

In Scotch Law. In declining circumstances. English.

VESSEL. The charterer of a vessel does not become owner pro hac vice where the control remains with the general owner, even though the direction in which the vessel proceeds is determined by the charterer. 239 U. S. 206.

Vessel Belonging to or Employed in the Government of the United States. Within the Meaning of the Philippine Tariff Act of March 1905. A vessel that is under the control of the United States; the words do not mean every vessel that carries a ton or a cargo of coal for the government. 240 U. S. 536.

Within the Meaning of Section 3, Revised Statutes. The word "vessel" includes every description of water craft or other artificial contrivance used, or capable of being used, as a means of transportation on water. 270 U. S. 20. See MERCHANT VESSEL (Supp.).

VESTA. See VESTIMENTUM.

VIDAME. Same as vavasour (q. v.).

VIDE. See. A word used to call attention to some other word, subject, citation, or page. English.

VILLANIS REGIS SUBTRACTIS REDUCENDIS. In Old English Law. A writ to bring back a bondman of the king. English.

VINDICARE. In Civil Law. To claim; to demand a thing or right. English.

VINDICTA. A rod or wand.

In Roman Law. From the use of the rod in certain proceedings or in the execution of instruments in writing, several forms of the term were applied to several of these. English.

VINEGAR. Vinegar, cider vinegar, apple vinegar, is the product made by the alcoholic and subsequent acetous fermentations of the juice of apples. 265 U. S. 442, as defined by Circulars 13, 17, 19, and 136, and Food Inspection Decision 140. Apple cider vinegar is made from apple cider. Cider is the expressed juice of apples and is so popularly and generally known. Id., 444; 285 Fed. 885, affirmed 294 Fed. 426; 280 Fed. 626; 269 Fed. 184; 35 Fed. 570.

VIRGE. See VERGE.

VIRGO INTACTA. A virgin. English.

VISCOSITY. See DEGENERATION (Supp.).

VITALIZER. See CURE (Supp.).

VITUM CLERICI (L. Lat.). In Old English Law. The mistake of a clerk; a clerical error. Jenk. Cent. 23. Burrill.

VIVA AQUA. In Civil Law. Living water; running water; that which issues from a spring or fountain. Calv. Lex. Burrill.

VOLENS (Lat.). Willing. He is said to be willing who either expressly consents, or tacitly makes no opposition. Calv. Lex. Burrill.

VOLUMEN (Lat.). In Civil Law. A volume; so called from its form, being rolled up. Dig. 32, 52, 1. Burrill.

VOLUNTARY BANKRUPTCY. It is not a voluntary bankruptcy if the man is forced into it against his will by his partner, any more than by any one else; and it is compulsory and involuntary if he refuses to join in such case and is forced into it, as much as in any other enforced bankruptcy. 264 U. S. 502, quoting 108 U. S. 71.

VOLUNTARY PETITION. In Bankruptcy Law. A petition upon which a person may be adjudged bankrupt filed by himself. 268 U. S. 431. See INVOLUNTARY PETITION.

VOX SIGNATA. In Scotch Law. A necessary word; an emphatic word. English.

VRAIC. Seaweed. R. & L. 1 Knapp 60, A. D. 1829.

VULCANIZATION OF RUBBER. Vulcanizing consists in mixing a small amount of sulphur with rubber and subjecting the mixture to heat for a period of time, during which a chemical combination of the rubber and sulphur takes place and commercial rubber is made. 276 U. S. 365.

Vulcanizing is old and well known. Its present high state of development represents an evolution of about eighty years. Practically all rubber must be vulcanized for commercial use. The amount of sulphur in the mixture is comparatively small, as for instance four to ten parts of sulphur to one hundred parts of rubber. The remainder of the mixture may be all rubber or it may be partly rubber and partly other ingredients, such as fillers and pigments, the other ingredient used most widely being zinc oxide. In the manufacture of automobile tires a considerable proportion of zinc oxide is generally used. A very old and well-known proportion has been fifty parts of rubber, forty-five parts of zinc oxide and five parts of sulphur. The mixture is "cured" by subjecting it to heat to make the vulcanized rubber of commerce. Platen molds have to be provided for giving the desired form to the rubber vulcanized. Steam has to be supplied for heating the molds and the rubber mix, during the "cure." Id., 366, 367. See CURE (Supp.).

VULGARIS PURGATIO. In Old English Law. Common purgation; purgation by ordeal, as distinguished from purgation of the canon law, which was by oath. English.

VULGO QUÆSITI. In the Civil Law. Spurious children. English. Inst. 3, 4, 3.

VYCINE (L. Fr.). A neighbor. Dyer, 36b (Fr. Ed.). Burrill.

WACREOUR (L. Fr.). In Old English Law. A vagabond or vagrant. Britt. c. 29. Burrill.

WAGES. See CURRENT RATE OF WAGES (Supp.).

WAINAGE. In Old English Law. Teams and implements necessary to cultivate the soil; the team and plow of a villain. English.

WALAPAUZ. In Lombardic Law. To disguise one's self to commit a theft. English.

WALENSIS. In Old English Law. A Welshman. English.

WALISCUS. In Saxon Law. A servant; A ministerial officer.

WALKERS. Officers of the forest with a special territory therein. English.

WALL. A stone or brick structure used as a defence, or protection, or to separate lands, or to enclose, support, or separate a building. English.

WAMPUM. Shell beads; used as money by North American Indians. English.

WANLASS. An ancient tenure which required the tenant to drive deer to a stand. English.

WAR. Perfect and Imperfect. In his concurring opinion in 4 Dall. 37, recognizing France as a public enemy, Mr. Justice Washington recognized war as of two kinds: "If it be declared in form, it is called solemn, and is of the perfect kind; because one whole nation is at war with another whole nation, and all the members of the nation declaring war, are authorized to commit hostilities against all the members of the other, in every place and under every circumstance. In such a war all the members act under the general authority, and all the rights and consequences of war attach to their condition. But hostilities may subsist between two nations, more confined in its nature and extent, being limited as to places, persons, and things; and this is more properly termed imperfect war, because not solemn, and because those who are authorized to commit hostilities, act under special authority, and can go no further than to the extent of their commission. Still, however, it is public war, because it is an external contention by force between some of the members of the two nations, authorized by the legitimate powers." 180 U. S. 267. Indian wars are of the latter class. Id.

See CONCLUSION OF THE WAR (Supp.).

WAR BETWEEN NATIONS. War between nations is war between their individual citizens. All intercourse inconsistent with a condition of hostility is interdicted for fear that it may give aid or comfort to, or add to the resources of, the enemy. Moreover, as said in 8 Wall. 195, "If commercial intercourse were allowable, it would oftentimes be used as a cover for intercourse of an entirely different character; and in such a case the mischievous consequences that would ensue can be readily foreseen." But war is abnormal and exceptional; and while the supreme necessities which it imposes require that, in many respects, the rules which govern the relations of the respective citizens of the belligerent powers in time of peace must be modified or entirely put aside, there is no tendency in our day at least to extend them to results clearly beyond the need and the duration of the need. The purpose of the restriction is not arbitrarily and unnecessarily to tie the hands of the individuals concerned, but to preclude the possibility of aid or comfort, direct or indirect, to the opposing forces. It is that purpose which gives birth to the rule and indicates its limits. The rule is simply "a belligerent's weapon of self-protection." (1916, 2 A. C. 307, 344.) And it applies even where the trading is with a loyal citizen, if he be resident in the enemy's country, since the result of his action may be to furnish resources to the enemy. The whole tendency of modern law and practice is to soften the "ancient severities of war," and to recognize, increasingly, that the normal interrelations of the citizens of the respective belligerents are not to be interfered with when such interference is unnecessary to the successful prosecution of the war. Private rights and duties are affected by war only so far as they are incompatible with the rights of war. 271 U. S. 287, 288.

WARECTARE (L. Lat.). In Old English Law. To fallow ground; or plough up land in the spring, in order to let it lie fallow for the better improvement. Cowell; Burrill.

WARNING OF A CAVEAT. Notice to a person who has filed a caveat to appear and set forth his interest. English.

WARNOTH. In Old English Law. A custom which required a tenant who held of the castle of Dover and neglected to pay his rent, when due, to pay double the amount, and for a second neglect treble the amount. English.

WARSCOT. In Saxon and Danish Law. A customary contribution toward armor among the Saxons, mentioned in the forest laws of Canute. LL. Forest. Canut. Reg. num. 9. Cowell; Burrill.

WARTH. In Old English Law. A customary payment, supposed to be the same with ward-penny. Spelman; Burrill.

WASH. A shallow part of a river or arm of the sea. R. & L.

WASH SALES. Bets upon the market in which it is understood between the parties that neither is bound to deliver or accept delivery. 263 U. S. 616. See MATCHING; RING SETTLEMENT; DIRECT SETTLEMENT (Supp.).

WASHINGTON, TREATY OF. A treaty signed May 8, 1871, between Great Britain and the United States, with references to certain differences arising out of the war between the northern and southern states of the Union, the Canadian fisheries, and other matters. R. & L.

WATCH. At sea a ship's crew is commonly divided into two watches; the master, second mate, fourth mate (if any) with one-half of the seamen and boys, forming the so-called starboard watch; after four hours these are relieved by the chief mate, and the third officer (if any) and the other half of the men, who form the port watch. 269 U. S. 371, quoting Paasch, Marine Encyclopedia, 300, 301.

A certain portion of a ship's company, appointed to stand a given length of time. In the merchant service all hands are divided into two watches, larboard and starboard, with a mate to command each. Id., quoting R. H. Dana, Jr., "Dictionary of Sea Terms," 129. The men are divided as equally as possible, with reference to their qualities as able seamen, ordinary seamen, or boys (as all green hands are called, whatever their age may be); but if the number is unequal, the larboard watch has the odd one, since the chief mate does not go aloft and do other duties in his watch, as the second mate does in his. Id., quoting Dana, supra, 133.

Anchor watch is the lookout entrusted to one or two men when the vessel is at anchor. Id., quoting Paasch, supra, 301.

Sea watch is used when one half of a ship's crew is on duty at sea. Id., quoting Paasch, 301.

WATERING STOCK. Increasing the amount of capital without increasing its value. R. & L.

WAX SCOT. An ancient duty levied for the buying of wax candles for churches. English.

WAYLEAVE. Right of way to carry minerals over the ground of another. R. & L.

WAYNAGIUM. See WAINAGE.

WAYWARDENS. Every parish forming part of a highway district in England elects a waywarden who with residing justices forms highway board of the district, levies highway rates, decides liability of parish for repairs, etc. Highway Acts, 1862, 1863, 1864, 1878. R. & L.

WEALD. A wood; the woody part of the country. Camd. Brit. 247. Burrill.

WEALREAF. In Old English Law. Robbing a dead body in a grave. English.

WEALTH. All useful or agreeable things which possess exchange value; all such things except those which can be obtained in the quantity desired without labor or sacrifice. 1 Mill Pol. Ec. 10. R. & L.

WEAR PLATE. See TIE-PLATE (Supp.).

WEATHERING. A treatment of gasoline which lowers the specific gravity and reduces the vapor tension. 268 U. S. 547. See CASINGHEAD GASOLINE; NAPHTHA (Supp.).

WELDING. The art, practiced immemorially, of uniting two pieces of metal in one piece by heating those portions which are to be welded to a temperature at which they become plastic and then pressing them strongly together so as to effect a union; as exemplified by a blacksmith when heating in a forge the two pieces to be welded and hammering them together. 265 U. S. 447.

The art of electric welding was invented in 1886. A branch of electric welding is spot welding by which two sheets or plates are welded together face to face, in spots, as a substitute for riveting; this being accomplished by placing the two sheets between two pointed electrodes applied to their exterior surfaces, opposite to one another, which heat the sheets to the welding temperature and exert the required pressure in the line between the points of the electrodes, resulting in welding together the inside faces of the sheets in the spot on that line. Id., 448.

The art of electric resistance welding was old and far advanced in 1903. Prof. Elihu Thomson was a pioneer in that art. In 1886 he obtained process and apparatus patents for so-called butt welding, which involved the uniting of the abutting ends of metal wires, bars, etc., by applying heat at the joint and the adjacent surfaces by means of electrodes, and pressing the two pieces together when heated to welding temperature. There was here true resistance welding, with pressure of the parts involved, although the electrode did not exert the welding pressure.

In 1889 Thomson obtained a patent for electric riveting, which involved the heating of the rivet when in place by means of a current passed through it by the use of electrodes, under pressure thereon, the effect being not only to swage the rivet and weld it to the adjoining metal, but apparently (when desired) to weld together, in part at least, the portions of the plates immediately adjoining the rivet.

In 1891 Thomson obtained a patent for what is called lap-welding. While the specification states that the invention is specially adapted to the welding of the overlapped edges of plates, it expressly includes "welding together strips, sheets, plates, or bars of metal where it is desirable to form a joint of considerable length." According to the specification, "the surfaces to be welded are pressed together to form a union," the work being fed in the longitudinal direction of the joint "through suitable pressure devices (preferably roller electrodes), the work being properly arranged, so that the pressure devices will press the surfaces to be welded together and simultaneously passing the electric current through the work at the point of pressure." The electrodes were employed to exert the welding pressure. The specification further states that "as the work is passed through such rolls with a continuous motion each point, as it comes between the rolls, is heated and the surfaces pressed together."

In 1893 Thomson obtained a patent relating particularly to soldering sheet metal pieces flatwise, either by the use of solder or (when applied to tin plates) by melting the tin sufficiently to establish union thereby. The electrodes, in the form of clamps or otherwise, served not only to supply the necessary heat, but to exert sufficient pressure upon the overlapped sheets to effect their union. A roller electrode is disclosed, performing the double function of heating and pressing, and having its periphery corrugated or grooved. This was to say the least, electric resistance spot soldering.

In 1897 Robinson received a patent on so-called projection welding, as specially applied to the welding of a splice bar to the web of a railroad rail, the splice bar having upon its inner face a number of projections which by the application of the heating current are fused, and by pressure made to form welds between the projections on the bar and the fused opposing portions of the rail. Kleinschmidt, in 1898, took out a patent for a similar process, and by methods not essentially unlike those of Robinson. 265 U. S. 448-450, quoting the opinion of the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit, pp. 682 et seq.

WERELADA. Purging of crime by the oaths of others. English.

WESTMINSTER. A city adjoining and part of London, England. It was where the superior courts were formerly held. English.

WESTMINSTER CONFESSION. A document containing a statement of religious doctrine, concocted at a conference of British and Continental Protestant divines at Westminster in 1643, and became the basis of the Scotch Presbyterian Church. R. & L.

WET CONCRETE. Concrete of a consistency which admits of convenient distribution through chutes and conduits and of ready flow by gravity. 269 U. S. 182. The use of wet concrete in various types of structural work had become a recognized practice by 1905. Contemporaneously with its increasing use and an active agency in inducing it was the practical adaptation of the apparatus, used in moving and distributing grain and other substances of similar mobility, to all the requirements for the convenient handling and distribution of concrete by gravity in building operations. Id.

WHALE. A royal fish; the head being the king's property, and the tail the queen's. 1 Broom & H. Com. 260; 2 Steph. Com. (7th Edit.) 19, 448, 540. R. & L.

WHEAT. Wheat is (1924) the chief product of the farms of North Dakota, the annual crop approximating 150,000,000 bushels. About 10 per cent is used and consumed locally, and about 90 per cent is sold within the state to buyers who purchase for shipment, and ship to terminal markets outside the state. Most of the sales are made at country elevators to which the farmers haul the grain when harvested and threshed. These elevators are maintained and operated by the buyers as facilities for receiving the grain from the farmers' wagons and loading it into railroad cars. The loading usually proceeds as rapidly as grain of any grade is accumulated in carload lots and cars can be obtained. When a car is loaded it is sent promptly to a terminal market and the grain is there sold. This is the usual and recognized course of buying and shipment. Occasionally a farmer has his grain stored in the country elevator, or shipped to a terminal elevator for storage, and awaits a possible increase in price; but even in such instances he usually sells to the buyer operating the country elevator, and the latter then sends the grain to the terminal market if it has not already gone there.

The price paid at the country elevators rises and falls with the price at the terminal markets, but is sufficiently below the latter to enable the country buyer to pay for the intermediate transportation and have a margin of profit. All transactions at the terminal markets, including the price, are based on the grade of the wheat, and by reason of this all buying at the country elevators is by grade. 268 U. S. 192. See GRADING; DOCKAGE.

Wheat—both with and without dockage—is a legitimate article of commerce and the subject of dealings that are nationwide. The right to buy it for shipment, and to ship it, in interstate commerce is not a privilege derived from state laws and which they may fetter with conditions, but is a common right, the regulation of which is committed to congress and denied to the states by the commerce clause of the constitution. Id., 198, 199.

WHEN NOT ENGAGED IN BUSINESS. Within the Meaning of the Acts of September 8, 1916, and of February 24, 1919, imposing upon domestic corporations organized for profit a tax "with respect to carrying on or doing business" at certain rates for a fair value of the capital stock, and exempting such corporations "not engaged in business" during the preceding taxable year. The exemption "when not engaged in business" ordinarily would seem pretty nearly equivalent to when not pursuing the ends for which the corporation was organized, in the cases where the end is profit. 270 U. S. 455; 242 U. S. 503.

WHIPPING POST. A post to which a person sentenced to be whipped is tied during the whipping. English.

WHITE. One without Negro, Indian, or Mongolian blood. English. People vs. Dean, 14 Mich. 406; Jeffries vs. Ankeny, 11 Ohio, 372.

WHITE ACRE. See BLACK ACRE.

WHITE MEATS. In Old English Law. Milk, butter, eggs, and cheese. English.

WHITE RACE. See CAUCASIAN (Supp.).

WHITEHEART SILVER. In Old English Law. A tax imposed by Henry III. on the lands in or near the Whitehart Forest, belonging to Thomas de la Linda, because he killed a white hart, which the king had previously refused to kill. English.

WHITTANWARIE. In Old English Law. Persons who stole hides and whitened them so that they could not be identified. English.

WHOLLY RETIRED. See RETIRED FROM ACTIVE SERVICE (Supp.).

WHORE. A woman who practices unlawful commerce with men, particularly one who does so for hire; a harlot; a concubine; a prostitute. Sheehy vs. Cokley, 43 Iowa 183. Abbott.

WIC, WICK. A termination signifying residence, station, or town. English.

WIFA. An old European term for a sign or landmark. English.

WILD'S CASE, RULE IN. An old English rule laid down by the courts to the effect that in a devise to one and his children or his issue, they took a joint estate for life, but if the party had no children he took an estate tail. R. & L.

WILL. See PROBATE (Supp.).

WILLS, STATUTE OF. Statute 32 Henry VIII. c. 1, which provided that all persons seised in fee simple, except those under legal disability, might devise to another, except a corporation, two-thirds of lands held in chivalry and all held in socage. English.

WITE. In Saxon Law. A fine for an offence; a pecuniary punishment; an amercement. Co. Litt. 127a. Burrill.

WITENA DOM. In Saxon Law. The judgment of the county court, or other court of competent jurisdiction on the title to property, real or personal. 1 Spence's Chancery, 22. Burrill.

WITHDRAWALS. Within the terminology of the sugar trade, special deliveries called for by the buyer. 267 U. S. 250.

WOOD CORN. A tribute of corn given the lord for privilege of picking wood. English.

WOOD PLEA COURT. A local English forest court anciently held in Clum Forest to hear and determine matters of agistment. English.

WOOD VENEERING. See ANIMAL GLUE (Supp.).

WORD. A word is not a crystal, transparent and unchanged; it is the skin of a living thought, and may vary greatly in color and content according to the circumstances and the time in which it is used. 245 U. S. 425.

WORDS, APT. Words required to produce a legal effect; words which will be held in law to have the meaning desired by those using them. English.

WORKING DAYS. Week days. 251 U. S. 336.

WORKMAN. A man employed in manual labor, whether skilled or unskilled, an artificer, mechanic, or artisan. 259 U. S. 527, quoting 231 N. Y. 105, and Webster's New International Dictionary. See OPERATIVE; EMPLOYEE (Supp.).

WORKS. Within the Meaning of the Federal Employers' Liability Act, Section 1. A station platform intended for use and used by a station agent in the performance of his duties, is part of the "works" of the railroad company. 275 U. S. 428.

WRECKFREE. In Old English Law. Being free of a forfeiture to the king of one's wrecked articles or vessel. English.

WRIT OF DELIVERY. A writ of execution for enforcing a judgment for the delivery of chattels. English.

WRIT OF FALSE JUDGMENT. In England, a writ to remove appeals from inferior courts, not of record, to superior courts. English.

WRIT OF POSSESSION. See HABERE FACIAS POSSESSIONEM.

WRIT OF PROTECTION. An English prerogative writ, protecting one from arrest for a year and a day, under civil proceedings. English.

WRONGOUS. In Scotch Law. Wrongful; unlawful. Ersk. Pr. 4, tit. 4, §25. Burrill.

WURTH. In Saxon Law. Worthy; competent; capable. Spelman; Burrill.

WYTE. In Old English Law. Acquittance or immunity from amercement. Used in the compound words: frendwytie, ferdwytie, blodwytie, wardwytie, and hengwytie. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 47, §§15, 16, 17. Burrill.

X

X. A contraction of word "extra," used in citing that part of the canon law called Gregory's Decretals, thus: Cap. 8, X. de regulis juris. Burrill.

XENODOCHIUM. In Old English Law. An inn; a hospital. English. Cod. 1, 3, 33.

XENODOCHY. Hospitality. English.

XYLON. A Greek punishment corresponding to the placing in the stocks. English.

Y

Y. Is constantly used for th in old English and Scotch records. Use of ye or ye for the, is the familiar example of this practice. Burrill.

YA ET NAY. An old expression meaning assertion and denial not under oath. English. 1 Mon. Angl. 173a.

YEAS and NAYS. The expressions of approval and disapproval in voting. English.

YEME. In Old Records. Winter; a corruption of the Latin, hieme. Fleta, lib. 2. c. 73, ¶¶16, 18. Burrill.

YEOVEN, YEVEN. Given; dated. English.

YOKELET. A small farm which can be cultivated with one yoke of oxen. English.

YORKSHIRE REGISTRIES. The registries of titles to land provided by acts of parliament for the ridings of the county of York; analogous to the registries of deeds generally established in the various counties of the states. Mozley & W. Abbott.

YULE. In England, the times of Christmas and Lammas. English.

YVERNAIL BLE (L. Fr.). Winter grain. Kelham; Burrill.

Z

ZEALOT. Word commonly taken in a bad sense, as denoting a separatist from the church of England, or a fanatic. Abbott.

ZEALOUS WITNESS. See WITNESS.

ZIGARI, ZINGARI. A term in the middle ages for vagabond. English.

ZYGOCEPHALUM (Graeco-Lat.). In Civil Law. A measure or quantity of land, as much as a yoke of oxen could plough in a day. Calv. Lex. Nov. 17, c. 8. Burrill.

ZYGOSTATES (Graeco-Lat.). In the Civil Law. A weigher; an officer who held or looked to the balance, in weighing money between buyer and seller; an officer appointed to determine controversies about the weight of money. Spelman; Burrill.

ZYTHUM (Lat.). A liquor or beverage made of wheat or barley. Dig. 33, 6, 9. Burrill.
